Senate Conferees Yield on Farm Issues; Licensing Feature Retained

Coal Prices Reduced

Ready for Action

House and Senate conferees last night broke from a deadlock on the price control bill with an agreement compromising farm features but retaining price control licensing and a single administrator.

Full settlement of the week-long price stalemate came at the close of a five-hour session that ran past the dinner hour. Leaders promptly ordered up the report, still rife with controversy, as a special order of business in House and Senate today.

The report, signed by all but two minority House conferees, accepted almost down the line the Administration formula for resolving farm price differences and salvaged strong Senate administrative provisions desired by the price administrator.

Even Break for President

Rejected outright, as asked by the President, was the O'Mahoney so-called wage parity formula which, the White House protested, would spiral costs by linking industrial wage rates with farm "parity."

But the conferees accepted another Senate provision fought by the President—the Bankhead amendment giving the Secretary of Agriculture virtual power of veto over the farm price orders of the administrator.

While House farm controls, preferred by the Administration, largely dominated the compromise, Senate conferees practically wrote their own ticket on nonagricultural provisions. These included elimination of the price board of review, imposition of licensing and controversial "buying and selling" powers for the administrator. These charges are expected to be sharply contested in the House today, and face the prospect of a close House vote.

Faces Test in Senate

The Senate's key test will come on conference rejection of the wage parity feature of the O'Mahoney amendment, originally adopted by the Senate, 55 to 31.

The farm price compromise specified the following minimum levels, below which farm prices cannot be fixed by the administrator:

One hundred and ten per cent of parity, as provided by the House.

The prevailing farm price on last October 1 or December 15, whichever is higher. (December 15 was added by the Senate.)

The average market price of farm commodities from 1919 to 1929, benefiting primarily cotton

Dionnes Disclose Specialist Will Examine Marie

Callander, Ontario, Jan. 22 (INS).—Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne disclosed today that a specialist was coming from Toronto to examine Marie, one of their quintuplet daughters.

Neither parent would say why Marie was to be examined. So far as was known, none of the little girls—now 7—is ill.

(In Toronto, the specialist was identified as Dr. John Laing McDonald, orthopedic expert and a member of the staff of the Hospital for Sick Children. He was said to have scheduled a visit to Callander to examine Marie.)

O'Brien Named SEC Commissioner

Robert H. O'Brien, head of the utilities division of the Securities and Exchange Commission, was nominated yesterday by President Roosevelt as a Commissioner of the SEC. He would succeed Edward Eicher, recently appointed by the President to service as Chief Justice of the District Court for the District of Columbia.

At the same time the White House announced that Robert E. Healy, at the request of the President, had withdrawn his resignation from the SEC.

Profiteering Curbs Sought In Both Houses

By Robert DeVore
Post Staff Writer

Members of Congress hammered at reported war profiteering yesterday with Chairman Walsh of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee demanding corrective action in the Senate and Chairman Vinson, of the corresponding House Committee, introducing a far-reaching bill to require labor unions and other "pressure groups" to register with the Commerce Department.

War materials manufacturers' spokesmen at the same time emphatically denied "excessive and unconscionable" profits charged in a report of the House Naval Affairs Committee. They cited instances in which war contractors have suffered heavy losses and pointed out that millions of dollars of private capital have been invested in plant expansions. The committee itself, through Vinson, disclosed that, through an error in editing, an 18 per cent loss to the Brewster Aeronautical Corporation, was reported as a profit.

Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, whose district is largely rural, declared that he believed certain farm organizations warrant classification as "pressure groups."

Labor Truce Plan Offered By Roosevelt

A.F.L.-C.I.O. Joint Board Would Settle Differences Arising During War Period

By Carson F. Lyman
Associated Press Staff Writer

President Roosevelt was reported last night to have proposed to leaders of the A. F. of L. and C. I. O. that they declare a truce for the duration of the war and name a joint committee to settle differences as they arise.

Such a truce, it was said, would be a blow to John L. Lewis' recent proposal that the two hostile labor groups resume negotiations, broken off two years ago, looking toward a unified movement.

The President's suggestion, said to have been made at unannounced White House conferences with C. I. O. and A. F. of L. leaders today and yesterday, was reported to call for a committee of three from each organization.

Confer With President

William Green and George Meany, president and secretary, respectively, of the A. F. L. conferred secretly with Mr. Roosevelt today, and Philip Murray, C. I. O. president, was understood to have made a hurried trip from New York to the White House yesterday.

A. F. L. leaders were reported to have given the President's proposal their unqualified approval, with the proviso that John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and former C. I. O. head, not be a member of the committee. The C. I. O. executive board is expected to consider the matter at a meeting in New York tomorrow or Saturday.

The President's suggestion was viewed here as a rebuke to Lewis, whose peace suggestion was received coolly by Murray and with some suspicion by certain A. F. L. leaders. Murray likened the Lewis proposal to the attack on Pearl Harbor and reminded the miners' chief that "all arrangements in behalf of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, with reference to unity, be initiated through the office of the president" of the C. I. O.

Lewis' Motives Questioned

Lewis' motives in suggesting renewal of the peace effort were questioned by the American Federation of Labor in its weekly news letter. Philip Pearl, A. F. of L. press relations editor, asked in his column, "What new form of skulduggery is John L. Lewis up to now?"

Asserting that Murray's reaction to the Lewis proposal showed that he did not trust his colleague's motives, Pearl added, "He must believe that the real purpose of Lewis' move was to capture control of the entire labor movement."

Mr. Roosevelt was said to have suggested that the joint committee meet periodically to settle disputes between the rival organizations and to confer with him from time to time on matters pertaining to wartime production.

Power Rationing May Force Householders to Dim Lights

By the Associated Press

Congress received from Government power officials yesterday a warning that the Nation faces a rationing of electricity—possibly this year—that may dim homes to conserve power for the war effort.

That possibility was voiced by Leland Olds, chairman of the Federal Power Commission, and G. O. Wessenauer, acting power manager for the Tennessee Valley Authority, in testimony during House Appropriations Committee hearings on the independent offices supply bill approved yesterday.

The rationing of electricity for homes, offices, night clubs and other civilian purposes, Olds told the committee, "is going to be necessary and is going to be done," and a survey to determine the power supply of the various areas is being made "to determine just what loads can be cut off without materially interferring with the normal life of the community."

Olds said he believed the emergency would call for power rationing in many regions "by the end of this year."

While it is hoped and planned, he added, that curtailment can be effected "without serious dislocation

London Hears

Son Is Born To Leopold

PRINCESS RETHY

London (Friday), Jan. 23 (U.P.)—The News Chronicle said today it had learned from "reliable, official sources" that a son was born December 31 to King Leopold of Belgium and his new wife, Princess de Rethy, and that the child was named Philip, Prince de Rethy, taking his mother's name since hers was a morganatic marriage.

The News Chronicle pointed out that the parents were married last September 11.

Belgians in London found it "strange," and even "incredible," when the marriage of King Leopold III to Miss Mary Lelia Baels, daughter of a former Belgian cabinet member, was announced on December 6, 1941. The announcement was made in a report broadcast by the German radio.

Viereck Seeks Venue Change, Charges 'Bias'

By Dillard Stokes

Counsel for the Nazi propagandist, George Sylvester Viereck, accused The Post yesterday of trying to prejudice people against the defendant.

The accusation was made in a motion to move Viereck's trial, on charges of concealing his propaganda operations on Capitol Hill, to Baltimore or Norfolk.

The District Court here was asked to put the trial off indefinitely, unless it is moved. And if neither of these requests is granted, Viereck's lawyers said they want the German agent tried before Justice T. Alan Goldsborough, who was charged Monday with "prejudice against the Government of the United States" in the Viereck matter.

Besides these pleas, Viereck's lawyers asked the court to muzzle the Government with an order forbidding any official person to talk to

Fresh Troops Join Attack By 200,000 On MacArthur

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Japan poured more troops into Luzon yesterday in an apparent all-out attempt to crush Gen. Douglas MacArthur's hard-fighting little Army by sheer weight of numbers.

Additional enemy troops were landed in Lingayan Gulf and Subic Bay, the War Department announced, as the 200,000 Jap soldiers already in action opened a new offensive against MacArthur's lines on Bataan Peninsula.

Meanwhile, however, a high Government official disclosed that American reinforcements have been sent to the Southwest Pacific, and that others are on their way to bolster Allied resistance in this critical area.

Supply lines to the southwest Pacific were set up shortly after December 7, this high spokesman said, at the same time as the Army carried out a tremendous troop redistribution to strengthen the defenses of Hawaii and the West Coast.

Hawaii, the Nation's main citadel in the Pacific, is now far stronger than it was before Japan's sneak-punch on Pearl Harbor sunk and crippled warships of the Pacific Fleet and destroyed much of the defensive air power of the islands, it was said.

A War Department communique, telling of the Japanese reinforcements being landed in Luzon, said that the entire Japanese Fourteenth Army, together with other units, is now in action on the main Philippine island.

The Luzon invasion army, the department said, is commanded by Lieut. Gen. Masahard Houlma, a 54-year-old English-speaking army leader, who is recognized as one of Japan's ablest generals.

Military men here estimate that Houlma has perhaps ten divisions and supporting troops, totaling about 200,000 in Luzon, not counting the reinforcements now being landed.

The new offensive reported yesterday by the War Department was against MacArthur's entire front, but the heaviest fighting was under way in the center of the line and on the west.

Prior enemy assaults have been directed for the most part against MacArthur's right flank. These were designed to break through along the Manila Bay side of rocky Bataan peninsula along which runs the only road from north to south.

He told, however, of the quick steps taken immediately after Pearl

Report to the Nation

Office of Facts Says Army of 7 Million Will Carry War to Foe

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

In a red-white-and-blue pamphlet entitled "Report to the Nation," the Office of Facts and Figures yesterday told Americans that they were to have an army of seven million men and that the war would be carried to "the enemy's home ground" to achieve a total victory.

The report, prepared under the direction of Archibald MacLeish, poet and librarian of Congress, who was made OFF director last October, said that Anglo-American production of war planes "soon" would exceed that of the Axis powers.

"More important," said the report, "we shall have the plant capacity to increase our production to the point where we can seize control of the air in all areas of the world struggle."

In the production of planes and tanks, the report declared, America is on the way to "outbuilding the world."

"In 1942 alone," it continued, "we will produce as many tanks and planes as Hitler did in all the years before 1939 when he was preparing for world conquest."

Other highlights of the report were:

The foundation has been laid for an armament program of a magnitude no other nation has ever attempted.

Nearly three times as many weapons and supplies of war will be produced this year as in the 18 months between June, 1940, and the end of 1941.

The Army now has four types of combat planes "better than anything yet produced abroad." American bombers are superior to those built anywhere else in the world. The Army Air Corps ferrying command already has delivered more than a thousand planes abroad.

Director MacLeish said that the

Reds Reported Closing In On Vyazma

Race to Keep Fleeing, Harried Nazis From Sheltering in City

Moscow (Friday), Jan. 23 (U.P.)—The Red army reported today that Russian troops charging 14 miles westward from Mozhaisk had captured Uvarovo in a two-pronged drive that now menaces Vyazma, the strategic railroad junction 140 miles from Moscow on Napoleon's road to defeat.

Uvarovo lies 4 miles west of Borodino, and a communique announcing its recapture implied that the Russians also had taken that historic town, where Napoleon's Grand Army won a victory but lost an empire in 1812.

As the Soviet forces swept down the Moscow-Smolensk highway toward Vyazma, 70 miles distant, another column was reported pushing in from the Rzhev sector an equal distance north, in what seemed to be a two-way drive to seize the town before the Germans had a chance to get a foothold in it.

[The British press, according to an International News Service dispatch from London, indicated that the Russian steamroller, if not already in Vyazma, is knocking at the very gates of that vital rail city 80 miles west of Mozhaisk.

[The Daily Mirror quoted the Ankara radio as saying the German forces were abandoning Vyazma.

[The Daily Telegraph in a Moscow dispatch said there was "every reason to believe the Russians are already in Vyazma," although there has been no official announcement.]

The Soviet radio announced the capture of the unidentified village of "F" and resultant clearing of the way to the town of "R"—pos-

Argentina Balks on Eve Of Vote at Rio

Delegates Prepare To Ask Showdown; Chile Likely to Sign

By Turner Catledge

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Jan. 22.—Argentina tonight threatened to remain out of the all-Americas front against the Axis and delegates to the conference of American Foreign Ministers prepared to call for a showdown vote tomorrow on a resolution pledging a joint break with Germany, Japan and Italy.

Argentina's representatives, acting on orders from Buenos Aires, threatened to kick over the traces, despite their agreement last night to unanimous action.

Foreign Minister Juan B. Rossetti, of Chile, the only other possible holdout, was reported to have received instructions from Santiago late today to sign the resolution as phrased by conference leaders last night.

Official Brazil Grows Tense

Enrique Ruiz Guinazu, Argentina's foreign minister, accepted the same resolution, which he even helped to draft, but the Buenos Aires government raised objections today, leaving him on a spot. Ministers of other nations, including Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, of the United States, are becoming impatient and propose to act without further delay.

[Acting President Ramon S. Castillo said in a press conference last night that Argentina could not participate in the war against the Axis because it is "unprepared" for such action.

["I don't believe an attack against one American country means that all other American countries are automatically belligerents," Castillo declared.—Editor's note.]

The first Japanese landing on Australian territory appeared last night to have begun, but while the invader thus again raised the stakes in his immense gamble, his line above Singapore was swaying before a British counteroffensive called the biggest so far.

A new Japanese thrust into Burma from Thailand was reported by a British communique which said British patrols had come in contact "with the enemy who crossed the border at Payataung, southeast of Moulmein."

The communique said the British still held some positions east of Kawkawreik, where a Japanese-Thai column was heavily engaged previously.

Rabaul Abandoned

From Rabaul, the capital of New Britain Island some 800 miles above the mainland of Australia, the defending garrison withdrew yesterday after blowing up the docks and just before communications were broken the island radio sent out word that 11 Japanese ships, including men o' war, were 45 miles offshore and coming in fast.

An Australian army bulletin stated that it was "not presently known" whether the enemy had landed, but of this there seemed little doubt.

Clearly, the hour of Australia's peril had come. The Government began accepting as recruits even German and Italian aliens and the Melbourne Sun thus spoke for the Australian press:

"We have given our best toward the common cause and now that we are in the vanguard of battle we ask the Allies to divert to the Pacific the men and machines, and above all the air strength, which alone can avert an Asiatic triumph."

The arrival in Rangoon of "a good number of military personnel" from Tavoy, the southern Burma port seized by the Japanese at the beginning of the week, was announced, indicating that a considerable portion of the garrison had escaped.

Ten Japanese bombers protected by 16 fighters bombed Moulmein today, destroying a hangar and a Mutinous Crew Returns Japanese Freighter to U.S.

Seattle, Jan. 22 (AP).—story of mutiny on the high seas by a crew determined to keep a Japanese-chartered ship from reaching Yokohama, came today from Seattle's water front.

The former Dutch freighter, loaded with 4000 tons of coal, was 20 miles off the Japanese coast on December 7 when the radio brought accounts of the attack on Pearl Harbor.

The Russian radio operator took the report to his fellow countrymen aboard the ship instead of to the Japanese officers. The Russians and the Dutch and Chinese crew members promptly overpowered the officers and put them in the brig. Then the vessel was steered for an American port. Once it was overhauled by an American patrol, but was allowed to proceed after an inspection of the uniformed cargo in the brig.

It was a clear case of mutiny, but the mutineers probably never will have to face a court.

Clothes to Make—the Soldier

War May Cut Away Men's Vests, Cuffs to Save Cloth

A valiant crusade for more sensible masculine clothing, long deemed a lost cause, may be brought to a victorious conclusion by the war, it appeared yesterday.

Representatives of the men's and boys' clothing industry have recommended to the War Production Board styles and simplifications designed to save 25 to 30 per cent in cloth, and to break the heart of the gent who likes his haberdashery gaudy, if not neat.

Principal blow to frills and fancy business were recommendations that would eliminate the cuffs, pleats, self-belts and wide knees on trousers and patch and inside bellows pockets and all belts on coats.

Another device to take up the slacks (wow!) of wool shortages would be the elimination of the second pair of trousers to the two-trouser suits. Phi Beta Kappa men (and other) would be re-

Bitter Issue

Canada Plans Vote on Draft Of Men for Duty Overseas

By the Associated Press

Ottawa, Jan. 22.—Canada announced today a popular election on the bitterly debated question of whether the Dominion will conscript troops for service overseas.

Warning that the war now is "a world wide conflict between irreconcilable forces," the Earl of Athlone, governor-general, announced the government "would seek, by means of a plebiscite, release from any obligation arising out of any past commitments restricting the methods of raising men for military service."

The date was not set.

Six months before the war Prime Minister W. L. MacKenzie King said that so long as his government was in power there would be no conscription of Canadians for overseas service. He has reiterated that commitment on several occasions—as recently as last November 12—and as a result, Canadian forces overseas in more than two years of war have been limited to volunteers.

Today the Earl of Athlone, making the speech from the throne in opening the third session of Canada's nineteenth Parliament, spoke of these commitments as having been made "prior to the spread of the war to all parts of the world," and

British Attack Checks Japs in Malaya; Foe Lands on Australian Island

Canberra Adds To Army, Calls For Air Help

By the Associated Press

Melbourne, Australia (Friday), Jan. 23.—Japanese marines, in their first invasion of Australian territory, were believed today to have landed on New Britain Island, 800 miles off the northern mainland after a withdrawing garrison fired and dynamited dock installations at Rabaul, its capital.

A radio flash from Rabaul at 4 p. m. yesterday (1 a. m. E. S. T.) said that 11 Japanese vessels, including warships, had been sighted 45 miles offshore bearing down on the island.

That was the last word from Rabaul which had undergone two heavy Japanese air attacks during the day.

An Australian army bulletin issued last night said:

"It is considered that the stations were demolished by our forces and it is probable that the town has been evacuated.

"It is not known presently whether any Japanese forces have attempted to land."

When noon Friday (Melbourne time) came and passed without any word from New Britain, War Minister Francis Forde confirmed the gravity of the situation.

"It is reasonable to assume that the Japanese have now landed at Rabaul," he stated.

Plane Carriers Seen Nearby

The communique said the 11 Japanese ships were seen 30 miles off Watom Island, which is 15 miles northwest of Rabaul in St. George's Channel between New Britain and New Ireland, both Australian mandates in the Bismarck Archipelago.

(The London radio also reported that three Japanese aircraft carriers had been sighted off New Guinea, the British and Dutch mandated island lying west of New Britain on the road to the Netherlands East Indies.)

For two days officials had warned that heavy Japanese air raids on both New Britain and New Guinea were the prelude to invasion, but last night's announcement electrified Australia.

While newspapers cried out for allied air reinforcements, defense officials planned to blackout all cities on the mainland, and also began accepting enlistments from resident aliens—Germans, Austrians, Danes, Italians and Czechs.

These aliens, eager to fight the Axis, flocked to join the defense militia units and recruiting sergeants smiled grimly as they wrote down such birthplaces as Berlin, Hamburg, Rome and Prague.

Rabaul was the main defense point for all of New Britain, a volcanic island still not entirely explored. Australian air units apparently based there have been attacking Japanese invasion bases in the Caroline Islands far to the north.

Japs Using Pursuit Escorts

Japanese bombers escorted by fighter planes—the first indication that aircraft carriers were nearby—have attacked the capital for several days in increasing strength.

Aside from the attacks yesterday on Rabaul, a Japanese flying boat also ranged far to the southeast to raid Tulagi on Florida Island in the Solomon group. No damage or casualties were suffered in that attack, the communique said.

Officials pointed out that Japanese possession of New Britain would give the invaders another foothold for the grand strategy of closing in on Singapore over 3600 miles to the west.

The South Pacific is dotted with a rich island chain producing rubber, rice and other products, extending from New Britain to New Guinea, Celebes, Borneo and the other Netherlands East Indies.

Prime Minister John Curtin, who had arrived at Adelaide en route to western Australia for a brief rest, said he was ready to return immediately to the capital at Canberra.

Complete battle kits similar to those issued to the regular army were handed out to local militia units.

The press also reflected the growing alarm on this big, sparsely settled continent, both because of the New Britain developments and the situation in Malaya above Singapore.

Inquiry Into Training

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 22 (AP).—A House of Commons committee will investigate the circumstances under which some 138 men were sent to Hongkong with the Canadian army expedition without having had the minimum required training, Prime Minister Mackenzie King told the House today.

Conservative House Leader R. B. Hanson told Commons that a government statement on the Hongkong expedition revealed a "very serious situation" respecting trained manpower. The statement was Defense Minister J. L. Ralston's report.

Harbor to strengthen the Nation's defenses in the Pacific. To that purpose more than 600,000 troops were moved in the United States during the first few weeks of the war.

First reports of Japan's stab-in-the-back raid on Hawaii were exaggerated, this official said, and it appeared for a time that our entire West Coast had been left defenseless. This was because the defense of the West Coast depended almost entirely on the Pacific fleet and the island stronghold in Hawaii. Army and air protection there had lagged somewhat, he said, as other points were strengthened.

Had the Needed Planes

Fortunately American aircraft production had given us quantities of bombers and pursuit ships. Almost the entire Army air force was thrown into the threatened breach.

The big bombers were flown to Hawaii and fighter planes immediately shipped to that outpost. Anti-aircraft and other defenses, however, had to be built up and moved to the coast.

Transportation of more than 600,000 troops to the defense of the Pacific area was possible only because the facilities had been previously created by the Army. Storage and switching yards had been prepared and ports of embarkation were ready.

The quick movement of such a huge force, made possible by these advance preparations, has been termed "miraculous" by the president of one of the Nation's principal railroads, the high spokesman stated.

This same efficiency has marked the dispatch of reinforcements outside continental United States, it was said.

Crisis Is Not a Surprise

Discussing the general Far Eastern situation, this official source declared that the present crisis there was not unforeseen. It has been in the cards for two decades, he said, ever since the United States signed the naval limitation treaty and accompanying pacts at the Washington arms conference.

In an effort to stabilize the Orient, we agreed not to strengthen the Philippines or other American possessions in the western Pacific and to limit our fleet. Japan agreed in return to respect the integrity of China.

The Army and Navy have always realized if Japan failed to live up to these agreements, we would be at a great disadvantage because of geography and our limited fleet, it was said. The surprise attacks in the Philippines, December 7, made matters worse.

America, however, had one ace in the hole, the spokesman said. We were in the lead in the production of heavy bombers and we sent quite a force of them to the Philippines last summer. Though some were destroyed, others are still in action operating from remote bases and are giving a good account of themselves.

This asset will grow in importance, he said, as production of the big bombers increases to great proportions this year.

Another important step taken, it was said, was the establishment of a unified high command for the Southwest Pacific War.

The text of Army Communique No. 70 follows:

"1. Philippine Theater: The Japanese are renewing their attacks all along Gen. MacArthur's line on the Bataan Peninsula. Particularly heavy fighting is in progress on the left and on the center. Enemy reinforcements are now being landed in Lingayen Gulf and Subic Bay. The entire Japanese Fourteenth Army, under Gen. Houima, together with a number of other units, is now in Luzon.

"Hostile air activity in Luzon was light during the past 24 hours.

"On Sunday, 17 enemy bombers attacked the city of Cebu.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas."

Severe Cold Snap Adds to Troubles Of Europe at War

Bern, Switzerland, Jan. 22 (AP).—One of the worst cold waves in years is adding to the hardships of war-torn Europe.

Traffic is paralyzed in many places, schools are closed and untold thousands are suffering from lack of adequate clothing and fuel.

The countries of central and southeastern Europe are hardest hit. Temperatures range from zero Fahrenheit to 20 degrees below, and severe snowstorms add to the difficulties. Dispatches from Turkey, Bulgaria, Rumania, Hungary and Italy all mention subzero weather.

The snow is particularly deep in Rumania and Bulgaria, where train traffic has been severely handicapped. All traffic on the Danube River has been halted by ice.

Schools in Bulgaria are closed until February 1 as a result of temperatures falling to 14 below. In northern Italy temperatures have fallen to 13 below.

urged that the government now "possess complete freedom to act in accordance with its judgment of the needs of the situation as they may arise."

The governor-general said plainly that Canadians must expect "an expansion of the establishment of the Canadian army overseas" and that the Dominion must produce more munitions and foodstuffs."

Selective service, he added, would be extended to effect the "orderly and efficient employment of the men and women of Canada for the varied purposes of war," and there will be "as complete as possible a mobilization of the material resources and manpower of the country . . ."

Canadian troops who volunteered for overseas service fought valiantly at Hongkong in December. There are more than 100,00 of them in the United Kingdom. Some of these participated in last September's expedition to Spitsbergen. Just before the fall of France a Canadian force reached the French coast, but it was withdrawn before it had a chance to meet the enemy. Some Canadians are at Gibraltar.

Singapore's Air Defenders Reinforced

By Stanley Jones
United Press Staff Writer

Singapore, Jan. 22.—Strong British counter-assaults on all the main land and air fronts in Malaya eased the Japanese aerial siege of Singapore today, shattered an invasion spearhead groping down the east coast and slowed or stopped the enemy drive in northwest Johore.

Newly arrived Hurricane fighter planes knocked five Japanese bombers out of the sky over Singapore, where 287 were killed and 329 were wounded in yesterday's raids, and helped turn back a second fleet of about 30 raiders before they could do any damage.

At least one Japanese fighter was damaged in today's raids.

Enemy Column Ambushed

Imperial troops ambushed a Japanese column striking down from Endau toward Mersing, 70 miles northeast of Singapore, and decimated its ranks while suffering only slight losses.

Bloody combat, probably the heaviest sustained fighting of the whole Malaya campaign, churned the swamps and jungles around Payon gHill, 68 miles northwest of Singapore, where strongly entrenched and ferociously battling Australians were holding fast.

Mounting aerial defense activity bespoke welcome reinforcements in planes, tersely acknowledged in an official announcement that "Hurricanes now are in action in the Singapore area." The speedy and heavily armed fighter planes helped win the aerial battle for Britain in the fall of 1940, and in their inaugural action here gave promise of giving the Japanese air force a collective headache comparable to that Adolf Hitler got from the Royal Air Force.

Jap Trucks Blasted

Bombers and fighters streaked north for the third straight day of heavy attacks on Japanese strongholds. Enemy mechanical transport behind the lines was blasted and machine-gunned, a number of vehicles were wrecked and many others damaged, while trucks and even staff cars were strafed.

In the same region a few hours earlier British planes swept over the roads, scoring direct hits along a highway crowded with many vehicles. Numbers were destroyed or damaged, and the fragments of the convoy were machine-gunned from low altitude.

Wednesday's Japanese air raids were the biggest of the war on Singapore, general headquarters reported. The casualties were several times as large as any heretofore reported in the steadily mounting air siege of Singapore.

About 100 planes took part in the raid Wednesday, a communique said—a number not great in comparison with other raider fleets, but which seemed to have had far more luck or skill at dropping bombs where they would take the heaviest toll in lives.

The daily communique reported briefly the imperial success on the east coast above Mersing against the Japanese pushing down from the Endau area 20 miles to the north.

"In northeast Johore there has been contact north of Mersing between enemy parties pushing south from Endau and our troops, who successfully ambushed part of the enemy, inflicting a number of casualties with slight loss to ourselves," it said.

Axis Claims "Absurd"

It reported heavy fighting in the Bukit Payong area a few miles north of Batu Pahat. In the latter region, the communique said, patrol activity continued—implying that the Japanese had been unable to advance appreciably if at all since they drove down along the coast from the Muar River a score of miles to the north.

Authorities termed "absurd" the claims in Axis quarters that the Japanese had reached the Strait of Johore separating the island from the mainland and had seized the main railroad to the north.

Harold Guard, United Press correspondent, reported from Kluang on the Mersing-Batu Pahat Road across the peninsula that imperial forces launched a strong counter-offensive in a vital sector of the western flank at 2 p. m. Wednesday.

Guard's dispatch appeared to dovetail with other reports that Maj. Gen. Henry Gordon Bennett's Australian fighters had struck heavily at the Japanese flank and from commanding positions in the rugged area of Bukit Payong, or Payong Hill, were giving the Japanese some of the strongest opposition they had found in Malaya.

All available defenders were being recruited in Australia, which lies only 800 miles southwest of New Britain

British Stop Japs, Siamese Invading Burma on Elephants

By the United Press

Rangoon, Jan. 22.—British imperials have repulsed elephant-riding Japanese and Thai invaders with heavy losses at Kawkareik, 45 miles east of the port of Moulmein, and they have sent troops to Ye, 100 miles south of Moulmein, to guard the right flank of the defenders of Burma's southeastern frontier, it was announced today.

Ye is the terminus of the railroad running south from Moulmein into the Tenasserim Peninsula, and is half way between Moulmein and the Japanese-occupied port of Tavoy.

American fighting plane pilots again escorted British Blenheim bombers in an unopposed raid on the airdrome at Mesareing, in Thailand, northeast of Moulmein. The Americans flew under the Chinese flag in Curtisss P-40 planes. All returned safely to their base.

A communique said that while the situation had improved, there was no cause for complacency because the enemy had "considerable numerical strength" in this most westerly of his attacks, which threatens not only Moulmein and Rangoon, 100 miles west, but also the Burma Road, India, and the Indian Ocean.

Japs Report New Inroad

(A Tokyo report broadcast by Berlin, heard in London, asserted that Japanese troops had penetrated Burma at a new point, where the Salween River crosses the Thai frontier, 95 miles northeast of Moulmein. This point is 70 miles east of the railroad running north from Rangoon, which carries American war supplies for the Chinese to Lashio for loading on Burma Road trucks.)

"Effectively supported by the R. A. F.," the noon communique said, "our troops have given a good account of themselves in the Kawkareik positions east of Moulmein. They caused the enemy heavy casualties and stopped him wherever met.

"While this is very heartening, it is no ground for complacency. The enemy has the usual advantage of aggressors—considerable numerical strength."

(The Berlin radio, heard in London, reported from Tokyo that the Japanese threatened Moulmein from three sides.)

Another communique said that Moulmein was bombed yesterday morning. Ten Japanese bombers, escorted by 16 fighters, destroyed one plane on the airfield there, hangars and a store hut. There were no R. A. F. casualties. R. A. F. planes, it added, reconnoitered enemy territory.

Thai Attack Rouses Burmese

This most northern of the Japanese incursions into Burma, carried out with the assistance of an unestimated number of Thai troops, was believed to have three aims:

1. To prevent a British thrust into Thailand that would endanger the attack on Singapore.

2. To attack Rangoon, capital of Burma and port of entry for American lend-lease goods for China.

3. To cut the Burma Road and thereby to choke supplies that might enable the Chinese to intensify their offensive against the Japanese.

An official commentary on the military situation said that a "strong attack" appeared in the making when the Japanese opened extensive dive-bombing and machine-gunning attacks on outposts along the border between Burma and Thailand Tuesday morning.

All of these attacks apparently were aimed at Moulmein, 100 miles across Martaban Gulf from Rangoon, with land forces heading for the city through passes in the Dawna Mountain range to the east.

Thai troops crossed the frontier, it said, and attacked an outpost held by Gurkha Indian troops west of Palu, just south of Myawaddi and northeast of Moulmein. Japanese forces strongly attacked British positions at nearby Sukli, where "two of our companies were hard pressed." Another Japanese attack was made at Tiwakale.

The participation of Thai forces in the frontier fighting made the war a personal issue to the people of Burma for the first time. Burma for centuries has been an enemy of Thailand and at one time occupied Thai territory as far south as the ancient capital of Ayudhya (Ayuthia), 42 miles north of Bangkok.

War at Doorstep, Batavia Forbids Departure of Persons Able for Defense Jobs

Oil Destroyed At Balik Papan To Thwart Japs

By Henry Hoogendoorn
Associated Press Staff Writer

Batavia, N. E. I. (Friday), Jan. 23. Ruthlessly burning its own rich oil fields and refineries in Borneo to keep them from enemy hands, the government of the Indies today prepared further for the Japanese invasion by sternly forbidding the departure from this capital of any civilians able to do war work.

The oil installations in the East Borneo section of Balik Papan already are ruined, the Dutch said, sardonically informing the Japanese they "might just as well forget about their plans" for an invasion there.

But as the Japanese pushed gradually closer toward this island of Java, the government decreed penalties of five years in prison and fines of 10,000 guilders (about $5000) for usable civilians who seek to clear out.

Fifth Column in Celebes

From the island of Celebes, where the Minahassa Peninsula has fallen to the Japanese, a correspondent for the Batavia paper Nieuws Van Den Dag wrote that long before the war thousands of Japanese had filtered into northern Celebes as fishermen, farmers or businessmen, despite preventive efforts of the authorities.

An official announcement said both wells and plants at Balik Papan had been utterly destroyed "in view of the clearly distinguished Japanese intention to attack Balik Papan in order to get hold of important oil wells."

The Japanese have been raiding Balik Papan since they swarmed onto the oil island of Tarakan, more than 300 miles up the Borneo coast. A great force made the landings on Tarakan but the valiant Dutch garrison fought on until it destroyed the last of the island's oil installations.

Between them, Tarakan and Balik Papan had an oil output of 1,680,377 tons a year—some of it of such high gravity that it could be used in warships with little refining.

Yesterday's Dutch communique described the latest enemy air activity against the East Indies Archipelago as slight, and another official announcement disclosed that United States Flying Fortresses, newly arrived in the Dutch East Indies, already have been in important action.

These great planes were the ones which sank a Japanese cruiser and fired a 10,000-ton tanker Monday 100 miles south of the Philippine island of Jolo, the announcement said. (A previous Washington communique had identified the planes merely as "six American Army bombers.")

Dutch Sub Sinks 3 Jap Troopships

By J. B. Bower
United Press Staff Writer

Batavia, N. E. I., Jan. 22.—Thousands of Japanese troops drowned before the eyes of Comdr. H. C. J. Van Well Groeneveld as he peered through the periscope of his Dutch submarine, watching his torpedoes drive home into an enemy convoy off Borneo, he reported today.

The attack, in which three Japanese troopships and one tanker were sunk in the night, had been announced in a communique late in December, but the commander supplied the details only today.

He chased the convoy into shallows, he said, and at one time he operated on only 30 feet of water over a mudbank, but he kept the convoy in range until he had done all possible damage.

He watched Japanese soldiers swarm to the decks of their blasted, sinking transports, light their flashlights and slide over the sides, looking, in the distance, like glowworms cascading into the sea, where their lights were extinguished one by one, until all were gone.

Valuable war supplies went down with the men.

The convoy included a cruiser, two destroyers and another transport, in addition to the ships sunk, and it was protected by pursuit planes, Groeneveld said. He intercepted it northwest of Borneo, in Api Passage between the Great Natuna Islands and Sarawak.

A few moments later he scored his first hit, on a transport which sank speedily.

Navigation was difficult in the restricted area, but the submarine managed to change position and send two more torpedoes into a second ship sailing a half mile behind the first.

By this time the Japanese destroyers were zigzagging through the channel and dropping depth charges. They shook the submarine but failed to damage it, although Groeneveld was unable to dive deeply.

His third victim was another transport which broke in two and sank after it was hit by two torpedoes.

Disregarding the danger of operating now in 30 feet of water, Groeneveld swung toward a tanker a half mile away. It sank after two torpedoes struck it in the bow.

British Stop Sudden Nazi Jab in Libya

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Jan. 22.—The German desert army has been turned back after a sudden 10-mile thrust in the red mist of a furious sandstorm, reports from the Gulf of Sirte battleground said tonight.

This sudden lashing out by the army of Gen. Rommel, after it had been pursued more than 300 miles across Libya, was described by the British Middle East command as a "reconnaissance in force."

Three strong columns supported by most of the Germans' remaining tanks made the penetration in fighting lasting all of yesterday, but at nightfall were forced to turn back by strong resistance from the British Eighth Army. British officers considered it to be a testing of British strength, and an attempt to prevent the British from establishing artillery positions preparatory to a full-scale attack.

British light tanks which had been harassing Rommel since he fled from Agedabia fell back to a line east of Mersa Brega, fighting back and inflicting casualties.

The Germans attacked in the worst weather the desert has seen in a decade; weather which had slowed the British advance, kept many British planes grounded and enabled Rommel to lay minefields. The area from which he struck is, incidentally, about the same from which the Germans last April began their drive which rolled back Gen. Wavell's depleted forces all the way to the Egyptian frontier. There is, however, no comparison between the present British strength and Wavell's weakness in numbers and equipment.

The British air force, unable to do much over the desert, took to sea and raided Catania, Sicily, Salamis, Greece and Candia, Crete. Bombers also made long-range raids behind the Axis lines on Tripoli.

DuBarry Bed Brings $760

Vichy, Unoccupied France, Jan. 22 (AP).—The bedroom furniture from the Merval chateau of Mme. DuBarry, mistress of King Louis XV of France, was sold at auction in Paris yesterday. DuBarry's bed brought a bid of 38,000 francs (about $760).

The auction created a sensation.

Death Urged For Smug British Chiefs

By E. C. Daniel, Jr.
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 22.—The R. A. F.'s new airdrome defense units were formed to relieve the British army of that job and permit it to organize "the greatest possible striking force for offensive operations on the continent," Sir Archibald Sinclair, air minister, told Commons today.

Speaking at the opening of debate as to the effectiveness of his new airdrome defense plan—a debate in which the death penalty was suggested for complacent ministers—Sir Archibald declared that it would be "second to none."

He was faced, however, with ridicule of the existing defenses; with stories of how British airdromes had been "invaded" by hunters, members of Parliament and small boys.

After he had described the organization of his R. A. F. defense regiments (the term in British usage involves a variable number of battalions) one member declared that a group of his friends was willing to wager $200 that they could capture the neighboring airfield, administration buildings and all.

Defending the minister, Capt. Harold Balfour, undersecretary for air, observed:

"Snoopers will be snooping at their own risk in future."

One critic in R. A. F. blue, Flight Lieut. Harry Victor Raikes, complained of slowness in preparations to meet a German invasion "that may come in March," and went on:

"If there is one new penalty that might be created it should be the death penalty for complacency on the part of any minister."

War Sidelights

Dutch Indies Join British Supply Pool

London, Jan. 22 (AP).—The Netherlands East Indies joined today Britain's Eastern Group Supply Council created last year to produce and distribute war materials to the best advantage of the Allies in the Orient.

"The association of the Netherlands East Indies in the council's work will complete the pooling of resources and joint action to meet military requirements in the Eastern group," a British foreign office announcement said.

The council aims at combining in a single program the munitions and military equipment required by all armies in the group, including forces in Malaya and the Mediterranean basin.

It also aims at seeing that a good share of the requirements is met by increasing production of countries within the group.

Koreans Battle Japs

Los Angeles, Jan. 22 (AP).—The Korean provisional government's army in China now totals 35,000 men, the United Korean Committee in America said today.

Of these, 9250 officers and men are in Chungking, where the exiled Korean provisional government is functioning.

Never since the Japanese conquest of 1910 has Korea, with its history of 4275 years and a population of 23 million, submitted completely to Japanese rule.

sibly Rzhev, in the vicinity of which the Red army has been fighting for several weeks.

The night communique of the Soviet high command said Russian troops continued their westward advance and occupied a number of populated places, including Uvarovo.

The Red army men were plowing through or skimming over breastdeep snow, marching shoulder to shoulder and tamping the snow into hard tracks for tanks and guns. Other forces, flying over the snow in gliders powered with air propellers, darted in on the German flanks to deliver hit-run blows.

The Soviet army organ Red Star reported that the entire administrative district of Tula on the lower Moscow front had been reclaimed. It charged that the Germans had destroyed 366 villages, 19,184 state farms, 209 schools and 50 railroad stations in the area and carried away virtually all of the livestock.

Dispatches from the northern front said Russian forces advancing steadily in a drive to lift the siege of Leningrad had broken through heavily fortified German areas.

Other reports quoted German prisoners as saying that their reserves were coming from France, flying part of the way—an indication of the gravity of the situation from the Nazi standpoint and the scramble to plug up weak spots before it is too late.

Shipbuilding, Now Outrunning Losses, Listed for 984 Millions

Land Says U. S. 'Has World Licked' On Cargo Vessels

Chairman Land, of the Maritime Commission, has told Congress that construction of Allied shipping is now forging ahead of losses by sinkings and that the United States has "the world licked right now" on standard cargo ships and tankers.

Reporting on the progress of the program for a vast merchant marine before a House Appropriations subcommittee in testimony made public yesterday, Land asserted:

"The last time I looked at the curves, the sinkings and the new production were just about balanced for the first time during the war, and now new construction is getting ahead."

That was on December 9. He reported that United States merchant marine tonnage was about seven million and that a total of 12 million more tons was in prospect for 1942 and 1943. On the other hand, he said that Great Britain started with about 21 million tons, lost about nine million tons and at the same time had additions of about five million tons.

But Axis powers have lost about 5 million tons, he estimated, and all world shipping losses amount to about 27 per cent of the 52 million tons available at the outset of the war.

After saying that United States and Great Britain had made replacements of about 1,500,000 tons each annually, Land asserted:

"On replacements, the Axis powers are not having much luck . . . As to exact figures I know nothing about it."

Nearly 1500 New Boats to Be Under Contract by July

A $2,096,138,875 supply bill for independent agencies of the Government in the next fiscal year carrying $984,410,800 for the shipbuilding program of the Maritime Commission was passed by the House yesterday a few hours after it was recommended by the appropriations committee.

The total was about five million dollars less than President Roosevelt's budget recommendations and $1,257,899,349 under comparable appropriations for this fiscal year. But the committee said subsequent supplemental funds probably would offset that apparent reduction.

The committee reported that on January 1, the Maritime Commission had contracted for construction of 968 vessels and had made other awards for which contracts had not actually been let.

"Up to December 31, 1941," the committee said, "keels had been laid for 308 ships, of which 178 had been launched and 129 delivered and placed in operation for use in conjunction with the armed forces of the United States or in foreign trade routes."

Other major appropriations were: Tennessee Valley Authority, $136,100,000; Veterans Administration, $110,909,088; Executive Office of the President, $5,135,325; emergency funds of the President, 25 million dollars; Civil service retirement and disability fund, $105,238,000, and Public Roads Administration, $88,500,000.

The bill also included $3,993,328 for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, an increase over the current fiscal year of $2,797,863, mostly for continued construction at the Moffett Field, Calif.; laboratory and aircraft engine research at Cleveland, Ohio.

For the Selective Service System, the committee allocated $34,745,000, an increase of $1,245,000 resulting from the new graduated recruitment program.

Chinese Blast Jap Air Base In Indo-China

By the Associated Press

Chungking, Jan. 22. — Chinese bombers, believed to have been escorted by volunteer American airmen, cascaded 20 tons of explosives into a Japanese air base in French Indo-China today in the first Chinese move against that neighboring territory.

The attack was regarded by some observers as possibly a prelude to land invasion into the Japanese-occupied colony from China's southwestern province of Yunnan.

The setup of the United Nation's supreme command in East Asia accorded to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek the direction of any operations which might be taken in Thailand or French Indo-China—this in addition to his continuing leadership of the Chinese armies in China.

(The Vichy government made no public protest against this phase of the United Nations' war machinery but angry, unofficial protests emanated from Vichy sources.)

The Chinese press has been urging consistently that the Chinese take the initiative against the Japanese in Indo-China, one of the enemy's great concentration centers for operations in Malaya and elsewhere in the southwest Pacific.

A Chinese army spokesman recently spurred this campaign by saying that all Japanese troops had been withdrawn from northern Indo-China, the region fronting on Yunnan. He said that the northern area was garrisoned only by regular French and native troops supplemented by similar forces moved from central Indo-China.

Full Publicity for Dies Investigation Of Joseph Lash Demanded by Rep. Thomas

Full publicity for the Dies Committee's secret examination of Joseph Lash, protege of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and allegedly "pink" youth movement leader, was demanded last night by Representative Thomas (Republican), of New Jersey, a committee member.

"The committee ought to make known to the House and the American people the activities of Joe Lash and his organization and the pressure from higher-ups to place persons with his views in key places in the national defense," Thomas declared.

At the same time Thomas stated that unless the committee majority decides to act he would recommend to Lash's local draft board chairman in New York that his Selective Service classication be changed from 1-H to 1-A "inasmuch as he already has passed the physical examination for Navy intelligence."

One-H classification, Thomas observed, is a deferred draft status for young men over 28.

The legislator disclosed that he has written Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of selective service, asking for investigation and explanation of Lash's draft status.

Thomas' reference to "pressure from higher-ups" apparently referred to reports that Mrs. Roosevelt asked the committee chairman, Representative Dies (Democrat), of Texas, to give Lash, a frequent White House guest, a chance to clarify his record of alleged Communist activities, with the expectation that such clarification would help him get a commission with Navy intelligence.

Lash has applied for a commission, but thus far the Navy has refused to grant it.

The committee questioned Lash in a closed session Wednesday. It met in another closed session yesterday to consider the dilemma posed by Mrs. Roosevelt's interest in the case.

Dies indicated that the committee had yet to find a solution. He promised to make a complete statement on the incident, but "not until the committee acts," possibly today.

Lash holds a nonsalaried position with the Office of Civilian Defense, of which Mrs. Roosevelt is the assistant director. He serves on OCD's eight-member executive committee on youth activities. According to Thomas, Lash is carried on OCD records as being affiliated with the International Students Service. According to records of the Dies Committee, Lash, veteran "youth" spokesman, has a record of years of affiliation with such allegedly Communist-dominated organizations as the American Student Union.

Thomas called attention to a magazine article written by Lash in 1937, in which he referred to a student antiwar strike and declared it to be "a dress rehearsal of what we intend to do in a war crisis."

In Malaya, the British Imperial troops holding the vital left anchor about 70 miles above Singapore in the Bukit Payong Hill area r seized the initiative yesterday and were smashing at the Japanese in a major battle—one that may go a long way toward deciding the fate of Singapore itself.

Moreover, it was disclosed that Hurricane fighter reinforcements, apparently the most modern and deadly of that class, had arrived and were in strongly effective action along with British bombers, which were striking with the greatest power yet shown at Japanese transport.

In the East Indies the Dutch, aware that the Japanese assailant was gathering for a spring upon Balik Papan on the Borneo east coast, destroyed its oil wells and plants as they already had destroyed those of Japanese-held Tarakan up the coast.

China, that active and sometimes rather overshadowed partner, sent units of her growing air force into Japanese-dominated French Indo-China to bomb one of the air bases from which the enemy has been supporting his Malayan adventure.

profits was raised while that body was completing legislative action on a bill authorizing 750 million dollars in shipbuilding and repair facilities.

In a voice choked with emotion, Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, asked the Senate to consider what thoughts must cross the minds of $21-a-month soldiers when they read Congressional Committee reports of excessive war profits.

"Checkbooks will not win this war," he declared.

He said he sees long troop convoys pass his home, and he asked the Senate to consider what may be their destination. They are "marching," he said, "to their doom, if necessary, to defend you and me."

For four years ended in 1938 Walsh recalled, Congress limited aircraft profits to 12 per cent and naval profits to 10 per cent. The limits then were lowered to 8 and 7 per cent, and later removed, he pointed out.

"I was bombarded by the Office of Production Management, by the National Manufacturers Association and by aircraft manufacturers with protests on the profit limits," Walsh declared. "They said it would delay our naval expansion program because there was no limit on profits of subcontractors, who would take more profitable foreign orders.

"The war has ended all that."

McNary Favors Action

Minority Leader McNary (Republican), of Oregon, said he hoped measures would be taken to prevent profits of the size disclosed both in the Vinson report and by investigation of a Senate committee headed by Senator Truman (Democrat), of Missouri.

Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont, remarked that progress in this direction was made in the pending war powers bill, which would grant the Government authority to inspect the records of war contractors and thus determine the extent of their profits.

(The Vinson report cities instances where war contractors suffered losses and where naval manufacturers invested large sums for plant expansion. For example, the committee reported that six airplane manufacturers had spent $27,334,912 for this purpose since July 1, 1934.)

The Vinson bill would require labor unions and all organizations whose activities affect commerce to file a registration statement with the Secretary of Commerce, setting forth names of officers, financial condition and activities in which the organization is engaged.

Civic leagues, cooperative agricultural associations, clubs, mutual or benevolent organizations, fraternal and eleemosynary organizations are expressly exempted from the bill's provisions.

Reports filed by the organizations would be open to public inspection, unless the Secretary of Commerce should deem disclosure of such information to be against public interest. Punishment by $500 fine or one-year jail sentence is provided for failure to comply with registration requirements.

Vinson's bill was the first legislative move to follow publication of the committee report which cited big gains in the assets of labor unions since the start of the defense program. In a few weeks, the naval chairman expects to offer another profits-limitation measure. He is the author of one bill to impose a 7 per cent limit on profits.

Letter to Girl Of 12 Assures Soldier Date

MARIE THOMAS
Reads Letter From Lonely Soldier

By Bill Brinkley
Post Staff Writer

The Fort Belvoir private who loves to jitterbug and waltz and wrote a letter saying so to blonde Marie Thomas, of Arlington, is going to get to dance to his heart's content if he accepts an invitation from Marie's parents.

Not, however, with Marie, who is 12 years old and much more interested in baseball than either jitterbugging or waltzing.

Marie got a letter Wednesday at her home at 1308 North Vernon Street in Arlington, from the soldier. He had picked up a slip of paper containing her name and address on U. S. Highway No. 1.

Eighteen months ago Marie had scribbled this information on the paper, added "Write me" and dropped it out of the moving family car. Miraculously, the paper survived the elements.

The slip of paper didn't state Marie's age, 10, at the time.

The soldier described himself as lonely and anxious to meet Marie, then added: "I am an ardent admirer of popular dance music and enjoy dancing as a jitterbug, also enjoy waltzing. Please write me. I will hold my breath till you answer."

Marie yesterday was hoping the soldier wasn't still holding his breath.

"She's rather young for dates now," her mother, Mrs. Claude Thomas, explained, "and besides doesn't care anything about them. She'd rather play a game of baseball."

But that doesn't mean the soldier is going to be left out in the cold. Mrs. Thomas, who doesn't like for a soldier to be lonely, said she intends to invite him up for the weekend.

"If he wants to come," she said, "I'll arrange a date for him with some nice girl and they can jitterbug and waltz as much as they want to."

Walsh Asks Pay for Men Lost in Action

The Senate yesterday was asked to continue the pay and allowances of all members of the United States armed forces listed as "missing in action" as well as those interned or captured by the enemy.

A bill introduced by Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, would keep pay checks in reserve not only for missing or captured soldiers, sailors and marines, but extend the same benefits to members of the Coast Guard and civilian employes of the War and Navy Departments.

Allotments from their pay to dependents and for insurance premiums would continue to be made. Where luckless missing soldiers had not made such allotments, War and Navy chiefs would be empowered to "direct that an allotment not to exceed the base pay plus longevity of the person concerned be made."

Researcher Traces Cancer In Animals to a Virus

By the Associated Press

Minneapolis, Jan. 22.—Virus as a cause of cancer, says Dr. Robert G. Green, University of Minnesota bacteriologist, is the only concept held today that offers concrete possibilities for the early diagnosis and prevention of the malady.

Dr. Green, who isolated distemper virus in dogs and has conducted extensive research on animal-human diseases such as tularemia and tuberculosis, ten years ago started tests on cancer in animals with virus as the possible cause, meanwhile laying aside the generally accepted theory that the malady arises from a chemical agent.

Results of Dr. Green's ten-year study were contained in a Minneapolis Star - Journal copyrighted article today.

The bacteriologist said his tests on mice, rabbits and monkeys over the period clearly show certain animal cancers are the result of virus infections.

Dr. Green's latest work, done in cooperation with Dr. Maurice C. Visscher, head of the department of physiology at Minnesota, involved the development of breast cancer in mice, long thought to be hereditary.

The article says the two scientists traced the malady to an infective agent which has been isolated and partially purified by use of the ultracentrifuge, and intricate laboratory machines which whirls test tubes within a vacuum sealed casing at a speed of 500 revolutions per minute.

The process, the article states, separates the infective agents from tissue elements and permits them to be studied in concentrated form.

The scientists said papillomas or "horns" found occasionally on rabbits in Minnesota, are caused by a virus and are a first stage of cancer.

Human papillomas, similar to the rabbit "horns," have been transmitted by Dr. Green to laboratory monkeys. This, the bacteriologist contends, is strong evidence that human cancers develop from precancerous growths caused by viruses, says the article.

Besides opening the way for similar investigations in humans, Dr. Green said, the virus theory offers the possibility of immunization against pre-cancerous growths which would prevent development of the more serious and oftimes fatal secondary cancers.

of the normal life of the people," it may mean "a great deal more than simply the elim'nation of neon signs, ornamental street lighting, the use of the radio in homes, or other essentially luxury uses."

The more serious shortages of power naturally will occur in the heaviest defense production areas, Olds explained, and the population of those areas may face a serious reduction of their normal activities requiring the use of electricity.

At present, Olds told the committee, there is not sufficient power available or projected to meet the war load of 1942, 1943 or 1944 without either additional capacity or a "material curtailment." He estimated the total shortage at several million kilowatts this year and probably three or four million in 1943, and added "we are likely to be in a very difficult situation when we come to 1945 and 1946."

The Gallup Poll . . .

Not A Hardship

By Dr. George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

(First of a series of three articles.)

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 22.—A survey of American public reaction to the tire rationing program reveals one striking fact.

More than one-half of all the car owners say they can get along without their cars. In short, while the possession of an automobile adds to convenience and enjoyment of living, the majority of car-owning families do not regard the automobile as a necessity.

This means that the public can absorb the shock of drastically curtailed auto driving with much greater ease than probably anyone in Washington has realized. In many specific ways Americans indicate in the survey that a reduction in their auto driving, or even giving up a car completely, will not cause as much privation as was expected.

Many Aspects to Problem

The survey was conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion on many different aspects of the tire rationing problem. Results are being reported in a series of three articles, of which this is the first.

One of the first questions asked in the survey was designed to find out how much difference it would make to American car-owners if the time should come when, because of tire shortages, they would not be able to drive at all.

"If it were not possible for you to use your car, would this make any great difference to you?"

The replies of car owners interviewed from coast to coast are:

YES	46%
NO	54

The new regulation will, of course, have a vital, almost tragic, effect on some people—particularly those whose livelihood depends directly on automobile travel.

One of the Government's principal worries is how tire rationing will affect industrial workers—how necessary an automobile is to get them to and from their jobs. Any dislocation of production owing to curtailed auto transportation could have a most serious effect on the war program.

45% Use Autos

Results of this questioning show that among American workers, excluding farmers, the auto is the most common means of getting to work.

- 45% drive to work (or ride with someone else).
- 34% walk to work.
- 18% go by public transportation system.
- 3% live on the premises where they work, or use bicycles, carriages, etc.

The fact that nearly one-half (45 per cent) get to work by auto would seem to indicate that tire rationing will have a far-reaching effect on the industrial population. However, the situation is not as serious as it might seem, because the survey shows that more than two-thirds of all those who go to work by auto say they could go by some other means if necessary.

This is additional evidence to show that, even in this motor conscious country where the per capita ownership of automobiles is highest in the world, large sections of the car-owning population do not consider their car a necessity.

The group of workers who normally go to work by auto was asked:

"Could you get to work by any other means if it were necessary?"

Their answers:

Could get to work by other means (chiefly train, bus, streetcar)	73%
Could not get to work by other means	27

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN
Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Trade Union Of Americas Studied Here

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

Secretary of State Hull yesterday told his press conference that Federal officials are now giving close study to plans for welding the North and South American republics into a vast war-time economic union.

Hull made his comment in answer to questions on the accuracy of published reports that such plans would be laid before the Rio de Janeiro conference and would involve reduction of tariffs and other barriers to the free movement of essential goods, a unified monetary system for inter-American trade and pooling of defense labor supplies.

The Secretary declined direct comment on specific features of the plan and would not confirm the report that the plan had actually been drawn up and submitted to the Rio conference.

Are Being Considered

He acknowledged, however, that all the proposals incorporated in the plan were now receiving consideration here. All of them involve matters of importance, he said, and most of them matters of more or less urgency. Naturally they are being talked about wherever Federal officials are together, he added.

Meanwhile Secretary Morgenthau revealed that Treasury representatives at the Rio conference are attempting to win approval for a common currency system to step up the volume of Western Hemisphere trade.

Morgenthau told his press conference he believed establishment of some type of currency "common to all of the American republics and to Canada" might prove the basis for post-war adoption throughout the world of a standard monetary sytems for use in interantional transactions.

He said the new system might require a special international monetary unit, belonging to no particular country, but backed by gold or silver deposits placed in an international stabilization fund by each nation belonging to the trade union.

Might Use "Trade Dollar"

Another possibility, he said, was use of the American dollar as the international trade medium, with all member nations participating in support of the "trade dollar," which would be distinct from the domestic monetary system of this and other countries.

Secretary Hull, in answer to questions on possible reduction or elimination of tariffs on munitions and essential material supplies throughout the Western Hemisphere, pointed out that such plans are now being formulated by the United States and Canada and said it was quite natural that officials should be exploring the possibilities of a similar policy covering a broader area.

President Roosevelt a month ago issued a statement of a "war production policy for Canada and the United States," calling for coordination o" the use of labor, raw materials and industrial facilities in each country, joint allocation of scarce strategic materials and removal of tariff and other barriers to the free flow of war supplies.

Hull told reporters yesterday that preliminary reports on the action of the Rio conference in working out a formula for severance of relations with the Axis were most gratifying, though not surprising.

There could not be a finer illustration of solidarity and the spirit of cooperation in this hemisphere in the face of common danger from without, he said.

The Secretary added that he was confident each of the American republics would continue to go forward in carrying out hemispheric defense policies.

War May Cut Off Men's Cuffs, Vests

The suit coat would be reduced about 1 inch, and the top coat by about 3.

Even the size of the lowly swatch, or material sample, would be limited to 6 by 9 inches. They now run as high as 10 by 16, and are a total waste except to little girls who make doll clothes out of them.

A recommended limitation that would play hob with Robert E. Sherwood, Gen. Frederick Osborn, Bernard Baruch and other overly tall gentlemen, is one to restrict the inside length of trousers to 35 inches. These individuals, it is assumed, will go in for the British or Harvard campus style of wearing the trouser edge just slightly south of the knee.

R. R. Guthrie, chief of the textile branch of the War Production Board, noted that these recommendations were industry-made and did not necessarily represent the Government's views on the matter. In view of the curtailed supply of wool for civilian purposes, however, it was an odds-on bet yesterday that most of the suggestions would be accepted.

Argentina Balks as Rio Conference Delegates Prepare for Showdown on Anti-Axis Front

tense, though nonetheless resolute, anticipating the worst in the event of a break with the Axis.

Stern steps were ordered by President Getulio Vargas to cope with German, Italian and Japanese influence in this country. Police started rounding up all suspicious characters and placed many others under surveillance, including members of German, Italian and Japanese organizations and Spanish Falangist (Fascist) clubs.

Following seizure of Axis ships in Brazilian waters, which included the Italian liner, Conte Grande, it was revealed that Germans had attempted to sabotage some vessels, wrecking machinery and pouring concrete into turbines.

As a result of these activities, President Vargas resurrected a decree promulgated four years ago to restore order after the coup d'etat in which he took power, providing the death penalty for persons guilty of sabotage.

It is learned on the best authority that Brazil's foreign minister, Oswaldo Aranha, will take the lead in breaking relations with the Axis in a dramatic move before the conference within the next two days.

Meanwhile, delegates to the conference spent the day in considering the official form of the declaration by which the 21 American nations are expected to jointly sever all relations with Germany, Italy and Japan.

Numerous foreign ministers, especially those from countries which have already declared war on or broken relations with Germany, Italy and Japan, still insist on the strongest possible language in the resolution.

Argentina's Foreign Minister, however held the language of the resolution already too strong. His attitude today, recoiling from his ultra-cooperative position of last night, is said to be due in part to reaction in Buenos Aires to the statement by Senator Tom Connally, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, in Washington yesterday.

(Senator Connally told a press conference that Argentina's role in the conference was like that of a gambler "attempting to play both the red and black at the same time." He added that if Argentina persisted in retaining relations with Axis nations, other Western Hemisphere nations might curtail business relations with her. Commenting on Argentine politics, he said that a forthcoming Presidential election in Argentina may reflect the "overwhelming desires of the citizens for complete hemispheric collaboration," but added that the Argentine "government machinery is so well oiled that it may be able to perpetuate itself in power.")

The Committee on Protection of the Americas is expected to take a formal vote approving the resolution breaking relations with the Axis some time tomorrow, following which its action will be proclaimed at a plenary session of all the attending ministers.

Brazil may then announce its immediate action in keeping with the terms of the resolution.

Axis diplomats and consular officials are reported packing for an immediate flight from Brazil. The Japanese military attache living at the same hotel with the United States delegation to the conference told waiters and bellboys goodby this morning, informing them he was going to Buenos Aires.

The belief here is that Argentina will attempt to avoid an actual rupture of relations until after her congressional elections in March, in which case it will no doubt become an international crossrods such as Lisbon is, and Rio was fast becoming.

The conference committee on economic defense agreed today to the tentative draft of a declaration pledging the American nations to cooperate in the production of basic strategic materials and to insure equitable distribution of such materials among all the nations with particular reference to the American nations at war. The resolution provides for each nation to take steps to curb speculation in vital materials to prevent a runaway rise in prices, and pledges fair remuneration to all workers engaged in needful industries, including agriculture, manufacture and mining.

On the economic side the meeting here is expected to be followed shortly by a conference of the finance ministers of all the Americas, to be held probably in Washington, for the purpose of working out the practical details of policies agreed upon here.

Engineer Lauds China's Spirit, Sees U. S. Victory in Year

For 19 years O. J. Todd, internationally famous civil engineer, built roads in China and checked river floods, got to know the Chinese below their skins and learned a little better than something about their neighbors, the Japs.

He thinks the United States, after it is thoroughly prepared, will "put the Japanese out of business in one year, probably less."

Todd came here yesterday from New York City, where the American Society of Civil Engineers awarded him the coveted Thomas Fitch Rowland Prize for his paper, "The Yellow River Problem." It was in the later of his 19 years on the river, in irrigation and road projects otherwise in China, that he learned just what manner of boys the Japs are. The Chinese were calling them the monkey men and sources of information respected by the engineer verified how Britishers, arrested by the Japanese in China following the invasion, were stripped of clothing and searched in the presence of Chinese. Todd left in 1938.

He brought with him pleasant impressions of the Chinese character and as emphatic ones of the Japanese.

"The number of Japanese willing to become suicides has become greatly exaggerated," he believed. The "great spirit" of the Chinese cannot be overemphasized, he said.

He has had half a million Chinese laborers in his employ, the working groups where the guerrillas spring from now in the war with Japan, and has them work in cold water on canal and dyke construction from sunup to sundown.

"They can handle their own organiations," Todd asserted. They worked on their jobs with their own government by groups, saying themselves who would cook and be foreman and punishing crimes by their own rules. The Chinese bandits didn't bother such people as American engineers, seeming to have a respect for anyone trying to develop and help the country. The bandits contended they were a part of the revolutionary movement, lifting China, he recalled.

Todd thinks the Chinese have three persisting virtues in the conflict—spirit, endurance and tenacity that can be relied on.

Philippines Are Doomed, Elizalde Says

The fall of Gen. Douglas MacArthur's forces in the Philippines is only "a matter of time," Joaquin M. Elizalde, Philippine resident commissioner in Washington, said yesterday.

The commissioner also produced a telegram from Philippine President Manuel Quezon and gave other evidence to refute Japanese claims that Jorges Vargas, former secretary of President Quezon, had gone over to the Japanese in becoming mayor of Manila.

The defeat of MacArthur's men will be "a matter of exhaustion, if nothing else," Elizalde asserted. And while the Japanese must sacrifice an untold amount of men and materials to take the Philippines, the net result will be prolongation of the war, said the commissioner.

Keep Flag Flying

With the Japanese dominating the islands, he asserted, it will take the Allies probably two years longer to attain victory than it would have otherwise.

The immediate object is to keep the American flag flying in some spot in the Philippines "so nobody can say we're not still there," he said.

Questioned about a Japanese radio report that Manila's Mayor Vargas had turned quisling and promised to colloborate with the Mikado's men in bringing about a "new order" in the East, Elizalde first said it would be useless to attempt to refute Japanese propaganda, there is so much of it.

Later, however, he produced a telegram which he said he had received January 10 from President Quezon. It read:

Appointed Vargas

"Regarding Vargas, several days before the entrance of Japanese forces in the city I appointed him mayor of Greater Manila and this was done in line with Gen. MacArthur's plans to have Vargas remain in Manila after I was evacuated from the city in order that he might exercise the authority to maintain order and prevent looting of the civilian population.

"The high commissioner (Francis B. Sayre) also left Dr. (Claude) Buss, his executive assistant, in Manila. Prior to my departure from Manila Gen. MacArthur expressed the opinion that officials of local governments might continue to function as such if allowed by the army of occupation.

"I have not received any communication from Vargas since the entrance of the Japanese forces in Manila nor do I expect any from him now, but I feel certain that he will not do anything that would be contrary to his oath of allegiance to the United States."

Roosevelt Names O'Brien to Fill Eicher's Seat on SEC

President Roosevelt yesterday nominated Robert H. O'Brien, head of the Securities and Exchange Commission utilities division, to be a member of the commission, succeeding Edward E. Eicher, former chairman, who has been made Chief Justice of the District of Columbia Supreme Court.

At the same time, Stephen Early, Mr. Roosevelt's press secretary, revealed that Commissioner Robert E. Healy, "at the President's request," had withdrawn his resignation as a member of the SEC in protest against the elevation of Ganson Purcell as the new chairman.

O'Brien, who is 37 years old, was born in Helena, Mont., and was educated at Beloit College, Beloit, Wis., and the University of Chicago. For two and one-half years after his graduation from Beloit, Mr. O'Brien was associated with geographical and the mining engineering departments of Anaconda Copper Mining Co.

He joined the staff of the SEC in 1934, serving in various capacities, such as assistant director of the registration division, assistant general counsel and associate director of the public utilities division, which he headed when Joseph Weiner left the SEC to go with the Office of Price Administration.

Meet Your Good Neighbors at the Rio Conference through

IT&T

Good Neighbors like to get their heads together. This week 21 Good Neighbors are doing it at the Pan American Conference in Rio de Janeiro. And back home millions of their countrymen are getting their heads together, too—through the services of I.T.&T.'s associate companies, All America Cables and Mackay Radio.

With cable and radio circuits between the United States and Brazil—American-owned and managed at both ends—these vast communication systems, which also serve the other American Republics, assure a steady flow of information among the 21 Good Neighbors.

Associate Companies of I.T.&T. own and operate more than half the telephones in South America and powerful radiotelephone stations in Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Chile and Peru, which interconnect 90% of the telephones on the Continent with each other and with the United States and the rest of the world.

Coal Prices Cut 25 Cents Per Ton

Dealers' Reduction Made at Request Of Henderson; Restores Jan. 16 Level

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Retail coal dealers in Washington and vicinity have heeded a request of Price Administrator Leon Henderson to reduce voluntarily the prices of all grades of coal by 25 cents a ton, effective today, it was announced yesterday.

The reduction, Henderson said, restores prices to the level of January 16, when coal dealers boosted price levels by 25 cents a ton without prior approval of the Office of Price Administration.

In another order, however, Henderson permitted a price increase of three-tenths of 1 cent per gallon on all grades of gasoline in the District, Maryland, Virginia and in 13 other Eastern and Southern States, in accordance with assurances granted last fall to the oil industry that it would be reimbursed for extra transportation expenses incurred to relieve the East Coast petroleum shortage. The increase will be permitted on all grades and at all retail outlets, including service stations.

Henderson Praises Dealers

In announcing the voluntary coal price reduction, Henderson praised Washington's coal dealers as setting "a fine example of patriotic cooperation in our effort to protect the people of this country against the evils of inflationary prices."

"It is the comparatively small price increase, which may seem insignificant at the time, which paves the way for menacing threats against our war-time economy," Henderson said. "The local coal dealers have made a notable contribution to our effort."

Henderson promised the retail dealers, however, to study "promptly" costs and margins to determine whether or not a price increase is justifiable at this time. Rises will not be permitted, he warned, unless the facts support the proposed boosting of rates.

Meanwhile, developments designed to augment the pace of the war effort followed each other yesterday in quick succession from the new War Production Board.

Among the most important:

1. Acting Priorities Director J. S. Knowlson authorized auto parts manufacturers to triple normal production of replacement parts for passenger cars and light trucks for the first six months of this year.

The objective, it was started, is to build up an ample stockpile of spare parts before the facilities which make them are converted to the fabrication of war munitions.

2. The priorities compliance section announced it was instituting a Nation-wide, plant-by-plant survey of 90 primary fabricators of copper, to check up on violations of priorities and allocation orders.

The inspection will be conducted by a special force of attorney-examiners lent for the purpose by the Federal Trade Commission. One objective, it was said, is to "indicate the points at which vitally needed supplies of copper and scrap are escaping from military production channels."

Diamond Dies Output Adequate

3. The materials division announced that America has safeguarded its supply of vitally needed diamond dies, used in the drawing of fine wire, by the establishment of a new industry of die cutters in this country.

The supply of rough Brazilian industrial diamonds is now adequate, it was inferred, and sufficient skilled craftsmen have been trained here so that the Nation is now the leading diamond-die maker of the world.

The orders permitting the increased production of spare auto parts are expected to enable the fabrication of enough replacements to service all autos for this year and the next, WPB announced. Manufacturers were given a high priority rating to obtain the necessary materials for the next six months, after which it is expected that they will realign their plants for exclusively military items.

Price-Control Compromise Reached

The compromise specifically exempted from invalidation by price orders any prices fixed by agricultural marketing agreements made under the act of 1937, a provision written into the Senate bill by Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming. This provision particularly will protect dairy groups covered by milk market agreements.

House Controversy Threatens

Facing House fire today was conference acceptance of the Senate authorization for the price administrator to buy and sell commodities. This was originally designed to assist prices of marginal or high cost producers, but House opponents contend it could be used to prevent runaway farm prices. Conferees wrote in a provision that the power be used when necessary to increase production.

Other highlights of the agreement:

Rejected the Senate's Tydings amendment, which required confirmation by the Senate of all employes of the Price Administration with salaries of over $4000.

In lieu of the House board of review, set up an emergency court of appeals on orders issued by the administrator. A court of three or more members would be appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States from judges of District or circuit courts to act on complaints.

Fixed the salary of the price administrator at $12,000.

Predicts Senate Will Concur

Chairman Brown, of the Senate conferees, who submitted the compromise, used as a basis for final agreement, said the report provides "a workable bill," and predicted the Senate will concur.

"But it is necessarily a sacrifice bill, and will prove just about as unpopular as a tax bill," Brown said.

Chairman Steagall of the House conferees said "it won't satisfy everybody, of course, but I think the House will approve it."

Conference leaders explained that farm prices must rise on an average of more than 11 per cent above present 99 per cent of parity levels before the price administrator can move in with price ceilings.

"There will have to be a general rise to bring them up to 110 per cent before Henderson can operate," Brown said.

Bitter Fight on Farm Provision

The ousted O'Mahoney wage parity amendment would have permitted a free rise of 25 per cent in living costs, leaders had charged.

One of the bitterest conference fights developed over the so-called Paul Brown amendment setting average farm prices between 1919 and 1929 as a level below which prices could not be fixed. A futile effort was made to restrict this to basic commodities, in which case it would have benefited only cotton. Conferees said they retained the original provision when they found that the price of sugar would be unaffected and potatoes would be the only other principal commodity benefited.

With living costs now rising at from 1¼ to 1½ per cent a month, Brown predicted that all of the arbitrary minimum farm levels fixed in the bill would be passed in "about a year and a half" and controls then will be entirely by price orders.

Inkling of the Fight Ahead

Although leaders predicted Senate approval, an inkling of the farm fight ahead was supplied yesterday when three farm Senators took the floor to defend the rejected O'Mahoney wage parity formula.

Senator Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma, said the proposed link between wage rates and "parity" was "necessary to maintain and increase production." O'Mahoney also insisted his plan would "help the Administration increase the production of agricultural products and thereby increase the supply. Senator Gillette (Democrat) of Iowa, said he would be "proud" to have his name attached to the amendment.

Perspective Needed

We hope that our colleagues who are responsible for the front pages of the country's newspapers will not take it amiss if we suggest that their vision of this war is somewhat out of focus. Judging merely on the basis of the relative emphasis given to the events of the past week, one might conclude that we have suffered one serious military disaster—namely, the death of a movie actress in a plane crash. But one might also conclude that this calamity has been more than offset by a series of brilliant victories—such victories, for example, as a prolonged artillery duel, the regaining of a few temporarily lost outposts, the recapture of a few square miles of jungle, the sinking of a few enemy ships and the downing of a few enemy planes.

Inspiring as it always is to read of heroic exploits by individual Americans, it is necessary to see these exploits in relation to the whole picture of the war. That picture is at this moment far less encouraging than might be imagined by many a reader who has been fed a daily diet of headlines like "Yanks Smash New Jap Thrust," "Dutch Blast More Jap Ships," "Australians Again Hurl Back Foe In Malaya." Such headlines may be true enough in the sense that they are based on officially confirmed facts, but they are misleading in the sense that they are utterly out of proportion. Naturally, any people which is engaged in a life-and-death war prefers to read about victories rather than about defeats. But it is essential that all of us should recognize the difference between mere local successes and the main tides of battle.

German Mystery

There are two distinct and conflicting schools of opinion about the rumors of internal tension in Germany which for the past few weeks have been appearing in the American press under such datelines as Berne, Stockholm, Ankara and even Vichy. One school holds that the collapse of Hitler's tremendous Russian campaign and the dismissal of high-ranking general officers has persuaded anti-Nazi, or at least Nazi, elements in the army and navy and in industry that it is now necessary for them to seize power and attempt to achieve some kind of peace by negotiation. This group, it is said, is now convinced that a complete German victory is impossible. It feels that the best that can be hoped for from a continuation of the war would be an inconclusive struggle that would bring total exhaustion to the Fatherland no less than to its enemies. This group, it is argued, can count on the passive support of a war-sick population and perhaps on the active support of the now thoroughly disgruntled S. A., recently reported to have been dissolved. The opposite school holds that the rumors to support such an opinion have little or no origin in reality. It says that they have been deliberately fabricated by the clever and satanic Dr. Goebbels. The purpose, according to this theory, is to encourage a false sense of security among Germany's enemies, especially Americans, concerning the European phase of the war.

Paradoxically both theories may be substantially correct. That is to say, discontent in Germany may be growing, yet Dr. Goebbels may be exaggerating this discontent for his own purposes. What would these purposes be? The recent history of Japan certainly proves that an artful simulation of internal weakness can provide a perfect screen for the most extensive and ambitious military preparation. Should we believe, however, that Hitler's difficulties in the Russian theater have no more diminished his ability to strike elsewhere—say, at Turkey, Spain, Africa or even Britain—than the long Chinese war weakened Japan's power to strike in the Pacific? On this question the Russian communiques of the next few weeks should provide a great deal of light. But even if the German situation in Russia and in the occupied countries is as serious as these reports from neutral capitals suggest, one could still discern a reason why the Nazi propagandists might make no effort to conceal them. This might be the hope of protecting the German rear from assault by diverting all the power and attention of the adversaries to the Pacific while the Eastern European front is being bolstered against the Russian advance.

The answers to two other questions, if we but knew them, might unlock the whole riddle. The first, of course, is the Hess affair. The other is why Japan chose to strike when she did. Did she strike in the belief that almost simultaneously the Germans would announce the capture of Moscow? Did the Nazis deliberately deceive their partners about the Russian situation in order to gain a much needed diversion and an argument for compromise peace? Some day perhaps we shall know. Meanwhile the wise course for the newspaper reader is to reserve judgment, to read as shrewdly as possible between the lines, and be surprised at nothing.

War Profits

Advance releases of the findings of the House Naval Affairs Investigating Committee citing the profits obtained on individual contracts placed by the Navy have created a false impression that profiteering is rampant. Concerns singled out for special mention as recipients of excessive profits are justifiably indignant because the losses many of them incurred were not given comparable emphasis. The Bath Iron Works, for instance, reported as receiving profits on several contracts ranging from 8 to 29 per cent, says in a telegram to The Post: "The average is what tells the story—not one outstanding profitable contract."

The Brewster Aeronautical Corporation, reported as having realized a profit of 18 per cent on a contract in the neighborhood of two million dollars, is the victim of an error, for which Chairman Vinson offers public apology. As set forth in the report, that company has actually taken a loss of over $400,000 on completed contracts amounting to $2,400,000. The Weston Electrical Instrument Corporation, whose 247 per cent profit on a $1033 contract has been widely publicized, assures The Post that its operations during the past year, which have been almost exclusively defense business, have yielded a profit of approximately 10 per cent.

The undue emphasis placed on the excessive profits obtained from individual contracts unfortunately tends to discredit the valuable work done by the Vinson Committee in exposing the defects of present contract methods. The report unquestionably shows that both the companies working on naval contracts and the officials placing orders have made lamentable mistakes in calculating production costs. Errors of this sort are in some degree pardonable in view of the essential haste in placing orders as well as the difficulties of ascertaining the costs of a greatly expanded program. However, the situation calls for stricter methods of cost accounting, as the Vinson Committee suggests, both as a protection against excessive profits and as a safeguard against losses for contracting industries. Competitive bidding for contracts no longer affords protection against excess profits now that our industrial capacity is being used to the limit for war purposes. Indeed, the Vinson Committee concludes that the cost-plus-fixed-fee contract is a better defense against profiteering if a close check is kept upon costs.

The committee also recommends a fixed limit upon profits from all defense contracts. Such restrictions were imposed under the Vinson-Trammel Act and finally repealed because they proved to be a brake on the placement of defense orders. For if profits are limited strictly on each contract, the possibility of offsets to losses incurred elsewhere is removed. Representative Vinson himself has taken note of such objections and is preparing a bill limiting profits on the basis of earnings over a period of years. But neither legislative restrictions on profits nor taxation of excess profits provides a suitable remedy for the inadequacies of the contract system. What we need to strive for is a system of contracting that will assure maximum utilization of productive equipment on terms that will be fair to the Government and to industry.

Hospital Beds

A special characteristic of Washington's population makes the need for expanding hospital facilities here most pressing. Many Government employes live alone and have no one to take care of them when they are ill. Hotels and rooming houses often enforce rules forbidding meals to be served in rooms and refuse to provide any sort of hospital service. This means that persons with minor ailments frequently have to go to hospitals or risk deferring treatment until hospitalization is unavoidable.

Even if the extra burden thus thrown upon hospitals could be disregarded, the city would still be unprepared to meet demands which a disease epidemic or military catastrophe would make upon its hospitals. Two years ago, during an influenza scare, these institutions were obliged to place beds in corridors, to assign surgical and non-surgical cases to the same wards, and in some instances to rent rooms in nearby private buildings to handle the overflow of patients. One new hospital was opened about two years ago and beds have been added to some of the old ones. But Washington's population has grown faster than its hospital bed supply. Certainly quick action should be taken on the Randolph bill to provide additional beds at Gallinger and Glenn Dale. And some means of expanding private hospital facilities must likewise be found.

Test Of Patriotism

Sacrifice by individual citizens to sustain our national war effort is a theme of great popularity these days. In principle, almost every American is willing to submerge personal interests to make certain that our defenders on the firing line will have the supplies and weapons essential to victory. But in actual practice some citizens are pitifully slow to shake themselves out of the habit of grabbing while the grabbing seems to be good.

A flagrant case in point is the veterans' pension legislation which recently passed the House and is now before the Senate Finance Committee. The United States needs every dollar that can be taken from the people by taxation or borrowing to finance the war. More and more of our resources must be devoted to the gigantic task of crushing the Axis aggressors. Yet a combination of lobbyists and politicians is trying to force through Congress a bill that would add to the already swollen list of handouts to favored individuals.

It should not be supposed that this bill has any connection with the relief of soldiers injured in battle. Instead, it would grant pensions to widows, children and dependent parents of World War veterans when the latter die from natural causes having no relationship to their former military service. To press such a measure at this time is to register crass indifference to the really compelling needs of our soldiers and sailors of 1942. The bill is such a flagrant grab for special benefits that neither the American Legion nor the Veterans of Foreign Wars has supported it openly. And Majority Leader Barkley is attempting to delay action so that it can be given further "study" by the Administration.

If this means defeat of the bill, Senator Barkley will be entitled to a mark of credit. But why should an outrageous grab for pensions when the Nation is in peril be set down for "study?" Does no one have the courage to say that special priviliges must not be extended in wartime? And why are the Legion and the Veterans silent? Here is a real opportunity for service to their country that wouldn't even entail an encroachment upon the extravagant pension system now in operation. It is high time to extend our concept of patriotism to simple but nonetheless important services that civilian groups can and should render.

Presidential Powers

The first war-powers bill passed a month ago reenacted the Overman Act authorizing the President to reorganize the Government for the prosecution of the war and to remove certain restrictions on the letting of contracts. It also revived and extended the 1917 Trading-With-the-Enemy Act. But, despite this legislation and the many emergency grants of power conferred upon executive agencies by existing legislation, numerous gaps in the legislative structure remain to be filled in. So a second omnibus war-powers bill was introduced last week by Senator Van Nuys and has since been reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee. The bill covers a varied range of activities, amply justifying its title. For instance, it grants the ICC emergency powers of control over motor carriers; relaxes existing restrictions upon the seizure of property for national defense purposes; facilitates condemnation proceedings by the Navy, and specifically empowers the President to grant priorities to permit the carrying out of contracts or subcontracts, with heavy fines and imprisonment for failure to comply.

These are only a few of the numerous assorted provisions of the omnibus measure which the Administration desires to see promptly enacted. Parts of the bill that would meet with strong opposition in ordinary times have ceased to be controversial since the outbreak of war. They are now essential, as Senator Barkley has explained, to round out the authority of Government agencies and enable them to deal with the changed situations growing out of the war. Other sections of the bill, such as those according compensation in case of injury to air-raid and fire wardens engaged in civilian defense and providing free postage for members of the armed forces outside the United States, raise no question at all. They simply take care of major and minor matters for which, in our unpreparedness, we have failed to make provision.

BEARINGS

Men are so much like ears of corn
One finds in every row,
The empty ears stand upright,
The well-filled ears hang low.

For men whose hearts are brimming
With joy on every side,
Are thoughtless of their posture.
They have small need of pride.

But he who stands too stiffly,
And moves a bit apart,
Perhaps holds close the golden husk
That hides an empty heart.

The War Cycle

It is amusing to read the diverse opinions of people who think they know what sort of peace would be a lasting one. No one knows, or even that there is such a thing. The history of the human race is a continuous round of war. War appears to be one of the experiences which nature employs in the progress of the human race; and only experience can teach man anything. Adolf Hitler won the war for the Allies, when he wrote the lousy screed, "Mein Kampf."

War will cease only when our knowledge of the destructive forces of nature reaches a point where further war is tantamount to race suicide. It has always been necessary for a nation to keep prepared for war, civil or otherwise, and it is a question whether that is a civilizing procedure or otherwise. China has until recently, been free of war for 10,000 years or more, but who can say that she has profited by it? We only know that war is only one of nature's agents, and man is but a pawn with little directing influence.

When this war is over, nature, the great molder of human events, will direct the peace, and man will have as little to do with it as Woodrow Wilson had to do with the last one.

Stop Numbering Wars

It is time to stop calling this war, World War II, or, the Second World War.

It creates an adverse psychological state of thinking. It implies that wars will go on and on: We finished World War I and are now in the midst of World War II. One hundred years from now, if mankind holds out, and counting a war to every 20 years, we will be in the middle of World War VII.

Let's stop numbering wars. This should be the final conflict. Let's make it so by giving it a name that spells total finality to Mars. Who started this numbering anyway, and why has not someone done something about it before this?

It's not too late. We can begin now. The Washington Post could take the lead. What is your name for this war, the last war? It cannot go down in history merely by a number. It needs a name. I suggest War for Human Liberty, War for Freedom, War for Lasting Peace. Either of these three names is suitable.

What name can we give this war that will spell life to nations and death to war lords?

Industrial Home Fire

It would seem that some further inquiry should be made concerning the recent fire at the Industrial Home School on Wisconsin Avenue.

Newspaper accounts are conflicting. The first report said that the girls attempted to prevent firemen from entering the building. Other reports said that the fire was caused by matches ignited by a radiator or matches found with cigarettes behind a radiator. The next report said six girls were left in the dormitory because of infraction of the rules and were having a birthday party with cake and candles. One girl passed a paper torch to light the candles—the torch fell between two wooden partitions and started the fire.

All reports agree that one girl was overcome by smoke and two heavy doors were battered down by the firemen. What doors? No mention is made of a matron being in charge at the time the fire happened. Was there a person in charge? If so, why the necessity for battering down doors?

This cottage is not large and is constructed after the manner of a dwelling and so far as I know there are no holes between wood partitions. The floors meet the walls and the walls are plastered. If a matron were present, it is only a step to the front door and there are two rear doors and also a fire escape on the second floor. Just how a girl could be overcome by smoke in a house where the first-floor windows are only 4 feet from the ground is beyond me.

It seems strange that six girls who are being punished are at the same time having a party. Judging from reports, it would seem that these delinquent girls were locked in alone. If this is true, it represents a serious situation. Formerly, rules did not permit smoking because these old buildings are a fire hazard and many people questioned the wisdom of the change which permitted smoking everywhere—even in bed.

This is the second fire reported in this building during the past six months and I am told at least one more in another building was not reported.

The Small-Loan Racket

I note with interest your article in today's Post about the small-loan business captioned "Upholding a Racket." Having at one time been directly connected with this business, I should have a pretty good conception of it.

The worst feature of the small-loan business is that when one is caught in its clutches, he seldom, if ever, can turn it loose. If he is good pay, he can renew his loan for the original amount after he has paid about one-half of the original with the interest, the latter figuring around 50 per cent per annum. It is like getting addicted to morphine as you can't quit until you are sunk.

The law should prohibit renewal until the loan is entirely liquidated and no branch or associate offices should be allowed, to which such loans could be shifted.

Should the District have a small-loan law, in addition to the prohibition of branch offices, elsewhere, outside companies should be prohibited from entering the District to make collections by hounding the borrowers within its borders.

Any honest man, moreover, who would be eligible for a loan with one of these companies can always find someone willing to help without exacting an outrageous rate of interest.

I know of individuals now who have been in the clutches of these companies for the past ten years, carrying the limit of $300 and keeping up renewals to the maximum, which means that the original loan of $300 they have paid back, a minimum of $750, and still owe the $300.

There is another class of loan sharks which do not prey on this class of people. They get hold of a merchantable piece of paper which has been given in some wildcat scheme and discount it at an enormous rate.

These loan companies are responsible for the defeat of the so-called 2 per cent bill, and a little investigation of lobbying in this respect would be enlightening.

I could cite offices which started business ten years ago on $5000 or less and are now doing business running into the millions. Truly, this is "a racket."

Policing Washington

Thirty years ago New York's great Mayor Gaynor was shot and gravely hurt by an assassin. As eminent physicians strove frantically to save his life, he prayed: "Take me, Lord: might as well, now, as just a little while later." He got back to duty, but didn't long survive, and his words of then fit the Washington police situation now.

Today District Commissioner Young told a subcommittee of the House District Committee that Washington may have to augment its regular police force with 500 or 1000 paid volunteer policemen—he was before the subcommittee in opposition to policemen's wage increases. But policing of Washington by the Army, beginning at no distant date, is inevitable, and no less logical; so might as well, now, as just a little while later.

Already the spectacle of armed sentries patrolling their posts within the metropolitan area of Washington is commonplace and, somehow, gives an effect of security. Their supply source is unlimited, their work involves no wages and hours problem, and once they become inured to walking beats through all streets all night crimes of holdups, housebreaking, pocketbook snatching, assaults upon unaccompanied women will cease. Of course, regular policemen could do all of that, but there are not and never will be enough of those, now. Like its population, naturally, Washington's police problems have multiplied apace, and increasing the numbers of regular policemen in proportion is utterly and absolutely impossible, since it means making policemen of paid volunteers in a time like this.

Logically, the National Capital's next "chief of police" is a brigadier general of the Army (maybe a major general), and might as well, now, as just a little while later. "Col." Ed Kelly's policemen will augment the general's soldier-cops by remaining detectives, directing traffic, day cops and by becoming senior air-raid wardens. And might as well, now, as just a little while later. Even special police and night watchmen are becoming subordinate to armed sentries, meaning the volunteer policeman "is out."

This is war. It is directed from Washington, the National Capital. Civil processes have to give way when needful—and insofar as the police go, might as well, now, as just a little while later. That is inevitable, anyway.

Pipe Line

Secretary Ickes deserves commendation for several months ago having proposed construction of a pipe line from the Texas oil fields to the refineries near Philadelphia, Pa.

Three tankers have been sunk and one other, after an attack limped into port on our Atlantic seaboard. The pipe line could save the loss. From the refineries on the Delaware, a pipe line for gasoline should be constructed to St. Lawrence Bay where the tankers could be loaded for the trip to Great Britain. This would cut one-half the sea distance from Texas to Great Britain hence would require only one-half the number of tankers. The steel to replace the tankers we have lost and will lose could build the pipe line. The pipe line can not be sunk. After the war it will have a high salvage value for domestic use.

The Post Impressionist

The Whamster

I refer to that special brand of mechanical sadist who goes around whamming the fenders of other people's cars. He is a breed of cats almost to himself. The fender laundries are crowded always with the aftermath of his work. His motto is:

Count that day lost whose low, descending sun
Sees not by me some fender-whamming done.

His particular hobby is to find a parked car whose owner or driver is not on the immediate scene, then take a poke at an unoffending fender. After he has created a large dimple and maybe cracked the edges of the outlying piece of enameled sheet-metal, he goes away contented—a reverse boy scout who has done his bad deed for the day. He does not stick around the vicinage and find whose car has been the whammee. He doesn't ever leave his name and address and the name of his insurance company. There may be some excuse for this neglect when the driver has just been leaving a dine-and-dance place or a night club and doesn't, at the time, happen to know what his own name is. But the number of cold-sober drivers who assault the outriggers of other people's rolling stock and go away incognito is astonishing. Such person is a cheap, paper-bound edition of the hit-and-run killer. The same lofty character lives inside both their hides.

I am just now wearing a veritable mammoth cave in the right hind fender of my lovely new blue jalopy, placed there by someone who forgot to autograph his masterly work—modest such and such that he is. It is not only a dimple-de-luxe; it went so far as to flute and scallop—nay, even smock—the lower edge of the thing and make a costly new fender necessary.

I have often thought I should like to catch one of these babies at his favorite outdoor sport. I shouldn't, in the least, mind taking a few weeks' meals in jail, in the light of the satisfaction it would be to me to mess up this human excrescence. Yet I should also like to study the bird, from a psychopathic standpoint. While taking him apart, I should observe closely to see if I could find what made the vandalistic part of him tick. I rather believe he is a victim of a disease we might name whamitis. Whenever one of these seizures comes on him, nothing but a virgin fender standing in its pristine and unguarded loveliness of contour, will do him a bit of good; when the wham-whim moves into his motivitation and takes over, the only thing that will sate his whamlust is to go vigorously after that fiend with his bumper. The sound of softly crushing fender-metal and the yielding jar of the impact are music and solace to his degenerate soul. The thrill of it echoes through his being for days and days during which unprotected fenders in the public places are comparatively safe from his inroads. But there are so many of him that the whamfest goes merrily on day and night, without a letup. They ought to have a regular route among the fender-fixers, to collect their dirty commission.

Most of these bimboes must carry no insurance. But one can't tell. Some time ago I was rounding the turn from Rosslyn into Washington, coming off the Key Bridge into M Street. Naturally, as the morning traffic from Conduit Road was heavy, I was acting like the muskrat in Rikki-tikki-tavi—sticking close to the wall. I was not more than three feet from the curb, when an ambitious lady from Colonial Village, going to her toil in a Government department tried to drive her Packard, at 35 miles an hour, between the curb and me. She didn't make it although, after she had completely amputated my fender, there was nearly room for her car to pass. She just didn't quite make it. As the British would say, "It was a near thing—wot!"

We had a very pleasant visit, in which she soothingly (after seeing that her own car was intact) assured me I had no need for perturbation—her car was fully insured. She gave me the name of her gyp insurance company (I'll give it to you if you will send me a stamped and self-addressed envelope, so you'll never patronize that outfit), along with her own name, and drove happily away. My own insurance company was never able to get one cent in settlement from that bund or the lady herself—I was out the price of an entire new fender.

Just the other day, while my present chariot was still in its pristine and undented glory, a truck man with neither insurance nor brakes on his murderous-looking deadfall, slapped the rear of my barge—I was waiting for a traffic light—with that high bumper they have on outmoded trucks, breaking the trunk lock off. The man assured me he would pay for everything. He gave me a reference, who said that so far as he knew, Eddie was a reliable fellow. I had the work done and sent Eddie the bill. So far as my insurance man and I can find out, Eddie didn't even laugh. This one whamming Bre'r Rabbit "he lay low."

Since that time, the man who gave Eddie a partial indorsement called to me one day to say: "Oh—about Eddie. After I told you I guessed he was all right, I found out he had been stealing gasoline every night at a place where he was night-watchman, they caught him at it."

Right then and there died in me a beautiful if feeble hope. I have charged the repair work to profit and loss.

If anyboy else ever hits my fender and does it in, I hope it will be Godfrey Munter again. Godfrey has been president of the District Bar Association. One time he anonymously hit my right hind fender, while my car was anonymously parked at the Beaver Dam Club. Godfrey called my home, after he had sleuthed out the ownership of the whammed crate, and told me to take the car to the fendery for a complete repair job at his insurance company's expense. I did. He did.

I wish Godfrey would open a night school in wham-ethics; become an Emily Post of whamdom. He has a distinct mission there.

Why are fenders?

Shipbuilding Program

By Ernest Lindley

Fantastic Achievement Is Possible

THE WAR PRODUCTION goals for 1942 and 1943 set by the President have been derided by Axis propagandists as "fantastic" and impossible of achievement. Admittedly, they can be attained only by such a prodigious effort as neither this nor any other country has ever made before. Some of them may prove to be slightly beyond reach this year, although expert opinion leans to the view that the 1943 figures in most lines can be equaled or surpassed. By making Donald Nelson generalissimo of war production, the President has cleared his own administrative decks for the effort.

LINDLEY

Meanwhile, with a minimum of fanfare the bulk of one highly important division of the program already has been placed in the hands of the producers who must make it a reality. This is the record-breaking merchant shipbuilding program of 8 million tons in 1942 and 10 million tons in 1943. Less than 2 weeks after the President had fixed the goal, the Maritime Commission had distributed the orders for 682 additional ships. The commission, usually conservative in its predictions, expressed confidence that this additional program can be completed on schedule if the materials are delivered on time and if labor cooperates in an all-out effort.

Even before this the merchant ship program had been expanded with a speed and to a size which taxed the imagination of some of the old-line builders. When the national defense program was launched in 1940, there were 72 ways in the United States capable of constructing ocean-going vessels. By the end of 1941 there were 229, with 48 more in various stages of construction. Now still more are to be built.

THE MARITIME Commission had embarked in 1937 on its long-range program calling for the building of 500 vessels in 10 years. But it is a long jump from 50 vessels a year to the delivery of 129 completed vessels in 1941, and then to 850 vessels in 1942 and about 1200 in 1943.

The present program includes several types of ships, but the mass output was made possible by the adoption of a 10,500-ton cargo vessel of simplified design, originally known as the "ugly ducklings," but later christened the Liberty Fleet. More than 1000 of these have been ordered, in addition to 60 ordered by the British prior to lend-lease, and 40 already have been launched.

SHIPS are as important as planes and tanks. However, this part of the defense program has gone so smoothly that it has received less public attention than the aircraft, explosives, tank, and ordnance divisions. The Truman Committee, which criticized more or less severely almost every other phase of the defense program which it investigated, reported that the Maritime Commission had done "a good job."

Strikingly, about one-third of the entire merchant shipbuilding program for 1942 and 1943 has been undertaken by a man who, until 1940, had never built a ship: Henry J. Kaiser, West Coast construction man, whose firm was one of the six companies which built Boulder Dam and Grand Coulee. When the national defense effort was begun, Kaiser came to Washington with an astonishing array of projects, ranging from mass production of airplanes to the erection of a steel plant in California. The contention that more steel capacity was needed was repeatedly squelched and his proposals to manufacture aluminum flatly repulsed. After a hard fight he got a "go" signal for a magnesium plant to use the Hansgirg process, until then untried in this country.

ADMIRAL LAND at the Maritime Commission gave Kaiser a different reception. Kaiser had bought a yard at Portland, Oreg., and made a hook-up with Todd Shipyards. By the end of 1941, Kaiser was operating four West Coast shipyards, one of them built from scratch, with a total of 41 ways, and had orders for 164 of the Liberty-type ships, including 30 for the British.

When the expanded war program was parceled out last week, Kaiser got the lion's share. He now has orders for 651 of the Liberty-type ships, plus 15 20,000-ton troop carriers. The December efficiency ratings of the Maritime Commission ranked his yards first second, and fifth among all building the Liberty type. (The fourth, working on a British order, was not rated.)

Kaiser is working on several other national defense projects, most of them construction, but including the building of steam marine engines. His enthusiasm and drive have been in marked contrast to the attitude of many business men seen around Washington during the last year and a half. The Maritime Commission welcomed him; OPM discouraged him. The difference may explain in part why merchant shipbuilding is such a bright sector of the war production program.

Story Of Rubber

By Herbert G. Moulton

Shrub And Tree

This is the fourth of a series.

A NUMBER of species of trees have contributed to the production of wild rubber in the past, but the principal contribution has been Hevea brasilienses, the same tree that was transplanted to and established in Ceylon as far back as 1876 and now is the standard tree of the rubber plantations. The principal supplier of wild rubber has been South America, and the next largest Africa.

In the collection of latex from the wild trees tapping methods have not been standarized, and the practices followed in coagulating the rubber are different and more primitive. In Brazil the usual practice has been to coagulate by means of paddles dipped into the latex and afterwards smoked over a fire. The carbon dioxide in the smoke plays a part in the coagulation process. Even more primitive methods are in use in Africa.

The wild rubber trees supplied practically all of the world's rubber until the plantation production came into the market in 1910. In that year wild tree rubber production was approximately 73,000 tons. Thereafter it shrunk to small proportions, but had a short revival of activity in 1925-27 under the stimplus of the relatively high prices then prevailing. It almost disappeared in 1932, but has gradually increased to a total production of approximately 28,000 tons in 1940 and at about the same rate during 1941—10,000 tons from Africa and 18,000 tons from South America.

The principal locale of wild rubber production has been the Amazon Valley. This produced nearly 42,000 tons in 1912, when the price was $1.21, had a later peak of 28,000 tons in 1926 and 1927 following the high prices of 1925 and with prices of 48 cents in 1926 and 38 cents in 1927, and shrunk to 6420 tons in 1932. At the present time the Amazon Valley is producing at the rate of about 14,000 tons annually.

It would seem that the production of wild rubber might be increased materially by much higher prices, such as the $1 to $2 per pound which prevailed when it was an important source of supply. After all, the wild tree rubber industry used to produce around 73,000 tons annually 30 years ago as compared with about 28,000 tons at the present time.

In addition to the stimulus of such higher prices as might be found necessary, reestablishment of the wild rubber industry on a scale comparable with the volume of 30 years ago would involve much time and effort in clearing paths in the tropical jungles, assembling and training labor and providing transportation. At that, much could be done in a year or two and this would seem the quickest possible way by adding to our supply of natural rubber.

The foregoing comments have reference to wild rubber from trees, but there is also another form of production, from the guayule shrub which grows wild in Mexico and is also subject to cultivation.

THE GUAYULE plant is a heavy, woody shrub somewhat like sagebrush, and it is a native of northern Mexico. As distinct from the Hevea tree which contains its rubber in the latex system, the guayule plant has true caoutchouc rubber in all its living cells except the leaves, and in the better varieties this amounts to 22 per cent of the dry weight of the plant. To produce the rubber it is necessary to remove the shrub from the soil and grind it quite fine, roots, and all. Hence the production of guayule rubber is somewhat analogous to the production of an annual crop such as cotton or corn, whereas the production of rubber from trees is more similar to the production of maple syrup or turpentine.

THE PRODUCTION of guayule rubber in Mexico was commenced in 1904. As a result of the high prices prevailing in 1909-1910 the production was pushed to around 10,000 tons annually, which threatened extermination of the wild shrub, but thereafter conservation measures were introduced. The output of guayule rubber varies somewhat with prices. It came to approximately 4000 tons in 1940 and about 5000 tons in 1941, and apparently can be stabilized at around 7000 tons annually.

To produce the rubber, the shrub is harvested, including the roots, crushed in rolls and ground wet in pebble mills. The rubber is then removed from the mass by flotation in water, in the form of small pellets like grains of wheat. It contains about 16 per cent to 20 per cent resin as compared with around 2 per cent to 5 per cent for plantation rubber, and sells for 80 per cent of the ribbed smoked sheet price.

Guayule rubber is useful for many purposes in the form produced, but to make it comparable with plantation rubber for most purposes it is necessary to remove the resin by the use of acetone or some similar solvent.

For many years the principal producer of guayule, the Intercontinental Rubber Co., has been experimenting with the cultivation of guayule shrub in California, and as the result of these experiments it appears that commercial production of natural rubber is possible within the boundaries of the United States, perhaps at costs somewhat around the present level of rubber prices, commencing on a small scale about five years hence and at substantially increasing quantities thereafter. The development of guayule plantations would not be of any immediate assistance in the present emergency, but could serve as a national insurance against disaster some years hence.

On Turning Suits

By Mark Sullivan

Wool Will Be Scarce Again

I AM informed, by sources I deem accurate, that after a few months, wool will be scarce, and mainly taken for the Army; that men's suits will be made, in part, of cotton, and of used and reworked wool. ("Isn't this latter what we used to call shoddy"—before we learned to gild plain things with euphemistic names?) The report is credible. If it comes about, it will be another proof that history repeats, in small details as in mighty events.

SULLIVAN

During the great war there was a tailor with a little shop on Union Square in New York, to whom I used to take my suits for cleaning and pressing. Once, as wartime scarcity reflected itself in shininess of surface, the tailor remarked that my suits were of good material, and if I wished he could turn them inside out, and thereby give me months of added wear.

I told him I had never heard of men's suits being turned; that the art must be difficult—since in the turned suit, buttons must be where button-holes formerly were, and vice versa, and there were other intricasies. The tailor, however, assured me he could do it, that he had learned the art when an apprentice in Europe, that in Europe turning suits was not unusual—if I had never heard of it, that was only because American lavishness has been too disposed to look down on careful economy. I left one of my suits with him. He turned it, with a skill so sound, and results so manifestly good, that I sent him all the suits I had. He was proud of his art, hence did it well.

SOME WHILE later, passing through Chicago, I dropped into the office of the Tribune, to chat with my old friend, Edward Beck, legendary among newspapermen as a great managing editor. Beck, glancing at the suit I wore, in a spirit of faintly satiric admiration, asked me how I managed to beat the war-time scarcity, how I happened to have new clothes. As I told him, his eyes lit up with professional zeal. "That's a bully story," he said, and called a stenographer. Without giving me a chance to reflect whether I wished a thing so personal as my suit of clothes to be made a news story, he asked me questions designed to bring out all the details.

At various times in my life, publicity has descended upon me, some not unwelcome, some that I could have got along without; sometimes brought about by entrepreneurs of my services, such as publishers and lecture bureaus; sometimes spontaneous and unsought. Never did limelight play about me with such sudden and dazzling glare as when I stood before the eyes of the world in a turned suit of clothes. The story appeared as a column in the Chicago Tribune, equal in length and conspicuousness to the dispatches about battles in Europe; it was telegraphed to newspapers throughout the country, which printed it under date-lines that classified it as important news. Clippings that came to me for months recorded publication in Asia and Europe.

BECK, with authentic newspaper genius, knew instinctively that news interest lies not in an event alone, but in the juxtaposition of the event and its background. Under ordinary conditions, my turned suit would have appealed to Beck's professional instinct no more than any other old clothes. But at a time when wool was scarce, when the Government was appealing for economy, and everybody practicing it and talking about it—in those circumstances a novel device for economy was "top of column, must."

Inquiry descended upon me, about the name of the tailor, and other details. That little shop on Union Square received customers novel to its unpretentious modesty. One I recall was Congressman, later Senator, Medill McCormick, of Illinois, who packed off his entire wardrobe in a trunk, including his dress suit, difficult to turn. Another was a prominent banker of the day, Frank A. Vanderlip. Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo was interested because he, as shrewd about publicity as any newspaperman, wished to give momentum to the Government's campaign for economy. McAdoo for some time wore on his clothes conspicuous patches, designed not for any utilitarian purpose of covering holes that were not there, but to serve as propaganda for economy.

The other day, seeing scarcity of wool approach once more, I dropped in to a tailor shop in Washington, to ask about turning clothes. The tailor said yes, it could be done, but had a demurring manner. He said the cost would be high. In the less expensive days of 23 years ago, the price I paid was, as I recall—I tell this whole incident from memory—$13. The Washington tailor said that the manufacture of ready-made clothes has so improved, and the cost so reduced, that a man would do better to buy a new suit of inexpensive clothes, than to have an old one turned.

Nevertheless, if the scarcity of wool comes, and is prolonged, I think I shall try to find a tailor who will turn my suits. My spirit will be better sustained by an old suit turned, or even by one palpably and shinily old, than by a new one made of inferior material dictated by Government economy. Even though I may have to progress far toward nudity, I shall follow a family rule impressed on me when young, "buy the best—or do without."

A Dream Nears Fulfillment

By Barnet Nover

The Rio Parley And Hemisphere Solidarity

"THE PEOPLE of Latin America," said the Chilean statesman, Juan Martinez de Rosas, in 1810, "cannot defend their sovereignty single-handed; in order to develop themselves they need to unite, not in an internal organization, but for literal security against the plans of Europe and to avoid war among themselves. . . . The day when America, united in a congress, whether of the two continents or of the south, shall speak to the rest of the world, her voice will make itself respected and her resolve would be opposed with difficulty."

NOVER

Like Simon Bolivar, who called the first Pan American conference, which was held in Panama in 1826, like San Martin and Bernadino Rivadavia and O'Higgins and Henry Clay and other North and South American statesmen of the nineteenth century who advocated hemisphere unity, Martinez de Rosas was well ahead of his time. For well over a century Pan Americanism remained in the realm of things hoped for but far out of reach.

NOW AT RIO America finds itself united in a congress of two continents and speaking as with one voice to the rest of the world. And there can be no doubt that, as Martinez de Rosas predicted, this voice "will make itself respected."

Judged by any standards, the agreement emerging from the Rio parley of American foreign ministers belongs in the category of great events. Its importance will remain even when the tragic situation which produced it shall happily have been disposed of. For, for the first time in the history of this hemisphere, the separate parts are about to act as a coordinated whole.

The 21 republics have repeatedly manifested their belief in unity. They did so at the conferences of Buenos Aires and Rio and Lima, at Panama and Havana.

But this unity was unity in the realm of principle. This time the nations of the New World have been called upon to implement principle by taking specific action. At Rio they have been called upon to agree individually and severally to sever diplomatic and economic relations with Germany, Italy and Japan and to take joint measures for the defense of this hemisphere.

The logic of this proposal is beyond contention. As long as Hitler and his cohorts are at large in the world no nation can feel itself secure. It is to the interests of all free peoples and nations to do everything possible to smash the evil force of totalitarian aggression.

IT IS ONE THING, however, for nations to be intellectually aware of the fact that the Axis threatens the liberty and security of each. It is quite another thing to act in accordance with that logic.

After all, the American Nation and people were fully aware of the menace of Hitlerism and Japanism long before we were prepared to take up arms against them. The curious course pursued by the Argentine government in the early stages of the Rio conference, unintelligent and self-defeating as it appear to be, nonetheless had a parallel in our own stand before Pearl Harbor.

Argentina's position at Rio has since undergone a certain modification in the interests of a united front. A formula is in process of being worked out which while seemingly preserving that country's freedom of action in the matter of the Axis diplomatic missions will actually commit her to do what 13 of the 21 American republics have already done and at least six others have announced their readiness to do, namely, break with the Axis.

The fact that the Argentine government has found it expedient to retreat from its previous intransigeance is, in itself, a remarkable demonstration of hemisphere solidarity. It proves that the centripetal forces operating in this hemisphere are now very much greater than the centrifugal.

LET THERE BE no mistake about it. It took courage for the nine Central American and Caribbean republics to join us in the war. It took courage for Mexico, Colombia and Venezuela to break off diplomatic relations with the Axis.

The remaining South American nations that proposed to follow the lead of those three nations are not unaware of the dangers that may result from such an act of defiance of the aggressor powers. They show no signs of being intimidated by this possibility. The attack on the United States by Japan has galvanized into life all the instincts of unity which have long existed in more or less dormant form in this hemisphere.

The dream of unity is becoming a reality in the Americas. We must not exaggerate the nature of that unity. We cannot exaggerate its importance. After Rio great difficulties will remain in carrying out to the full the implications of that united stand in the realm of agricultural integration and of industrial mobilization, of strategy and shipping, of trade and finance. Rio is the brilliant culmination of a long and patient effort in the direction of hemisphere harmony and solidarity. But it is not so much end as beginning.

FOR THE FIRST time since the nations of the New World achieved their independence it is now possible to talk of a united hemisphere. Some nations may share in that unity with reluctance, with mental reservations, with ill-concealed doubts. It will not be fatal. The significant fact is that the degree of unity demonstrated at Rio is infinitely greater than the measure of disagreement and disharmony there demonstrated.

At a time when the United States is facing the greatest crisis in its history, when it must call upon every resource it commands and will need every bit of support it can get from our neighbors, we have reason to be grateful that this is the case and thankful to those who, like President Roosevelt, Secretary Hull, Undersecretary Welles and their coworkers in the field of inter-American relations, made that unity possible.

At Rio a new order is coming into being, not the specious kind of "new order" which Hitler has proclaimed in Europe and which rests on murder and slavery, but an order based on friendship and mutual helpfulness and cooperation.

Goebbels Warns Germany Of Fate

Berlin, Jan. 22 (Official Broadcast Recorded by (AP). — Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels, writing in this week's Das Reich, said that in the present winter war "we are facing quite different aspects and also quite different military possibilities than in the winter of 1939-40."

"This war," he said, "is a national test which is definitely deciding the fate of the German people. . . ."

He said the cares which occupied Germany two years ago "are shrinking to nothingness" compared with the present great military struggle which the entry of Japan and the United States turned into a second World War.

Dr. Goebbels said the war against Russia in the East "now is being conducted in its seventh month with stubborn fierceness" and "is confronting the nation in its entirety daily with ever new problems."

Irresponsible Union Power

IT IS expedient politics to say that the great division of our unions into two rival and generally hostile groups is a deplorable thing, and most citizens not in politics repeat the same phrases by way of proving that they are prolabor. The reasons why politicians say what they say are various and always subject to suspicion, but those other Americans, the nonpoliticians, who accept their opinions ready-made from the orations and editorials, just don't know what they are talking about. They are emoting when they should be thinking.

A unified or combined organization of the C. I. O. and the A. F. L., under the present laws and under the leadership of any of the men now prominent in union politics, would be disastrous to every American worker and would confer on the bosses of this new combine a power to govern our Government by the same brutal, cynical, thieving, irresponsible methods that have distinguished their rule of the unions up to now. Union bosses who have never been anything better than very low-grade politicians would acquire the rights but none of the responsibilities of management in all the industries of the entire Nation, including agriculture, and every man and woman who toils would be compelled to contribute to their financial and political power over the Government established by the Constitution.

No man or group of men on earth today can be trusted with such power, and at least until Congress passes laws recognizing and forefending this danger by establishing the authority of the Government over unions, the reconciliation of the C. I. O. and the A. F. L. is to be feared and opposed in the interests of all the people.

BETWEEN them the C. I. O. and A. F. L. claim ten million members, a figure which may be discounted about 30 per cent to allow for exaggeration and that large element of captive and unwilling members who were driven into union man-traps by the unioneers and the Communists of the Labor Relations Board. But a unified organization would quickly realize that figure of ten million and, in the course of the industrial war effort, would run it up to 20 million and probably more. All these human beings, the equivalent of a large nation, would have to pay fees, dues, assessments and income taxes at the source, through the checkoff, into central union treasuries which, under existing laws, are under the hands of the boss unioneers, who may use the money as they wish and steal it if they wish and need account to nobody.

That great central pool, or sea, of money would be sufficient to buy the Governorships of a majority, possibly all, of the States, buy or capture all the Legislatures and buy a majority of both houses of Congress and the central bosses would still be private citizens, without official responsibility to the Nation and subject to no authority but their own will. That the best of them would be ignorant, if cunning, and dishonest, if plausible, men is provable by a glance over the roster of union leadership today, from which these new bosses of the Nation, and the head boss, who would become the President's boss, must come.

The strongest of them are as fiercely Nazi as Adolf Hitler himself, except only that they reject his concern with religion and his anti-Semitism. Their methods of propaganda, their ethics and their brutal contempt for the human rights and dignity of the individual man and woman are utterly Hitlerian, and the reason why they fight so fiercely against Government authority by law over unions is that they strive toward a day when they will be stronger than the Government, with power over the Government and all human life in the Nation, still without responsibility.

THEY CLAIM a first lien on the earnings of all workers who fall into their power, and even today, when concern is expressed over a proposal to establish a forced-savings plan with a small checkoff to pay for the war and resist inflation, the union checkoff is an established thing affecting hundreds of thousands of toilers who simply kiss their money goodby and never learn what is done with it.

The A. F. L. has not reformed. Some spectacular criminals have been sent to prison, no thanks whatever to William Green or the A. F. L., but Green and the entire executive council sat with George Browne throughout his evil career, and Green and Joseph Padway, the general counsel, praised and upheld him. And the central union body of Los Angeles adopted a formal resolution of sympathy for the unspeakable Willie Bioff as a fellow union politician when it was well known that he had been master of a stable of harlots and was a traitor to and exploiter of labor.

The C. I. O. has not changed, either, and any amalgamation of the two bodies, plus the vast new strength which would be captured in the war industries, inevitably would establish as the highest governing authority of the Nation the boss leaders of an unofficial, irresponsible, reckless, ruthless power, lacking conscience and skill in American methods of government and not apparently even aware of the existence of the soul in the human beings.

But this reunion is inevitable, and Congress alone can avert the final, total disaster by enacting laws permitting the Nation to control the unions, lest the union politicians acquire power to govern the Government.

Historian Defends Newspaper Operation Of Radio Stations

By the Associated Press

A noted historian told the Federal Communications Commision yesterday that it was a natural development for newspapers to enter the radio field.

Testifying in connection with the commission's investigation of newspaper-radio relationships, Dr. Frank Luther Mott, director of the University of Iowa's School of Journalism, opposed any prohibitions which would prevent future acquisition of radio stations by newspaper interests.

Dr. Mott, whose "History of American Magazines," was a Pulitzer prize winner, carefully traced for the commission the history of American journalism, starting with colonial times, and concluded that there had been a vast improvement.

Commissioner T. A. M. Craven, who opposed the investigation, asked Dr. Mott whether he saw any danger in the licensing of more radio stations to newspapers.

"No, I don't," the witness replied.

Craven then asked whether prohibitions against newspapers operating radio stations would endanger the freedom of the press and Dr. Mott replied that "It certainly would be a strong blow against the newspapers, economically and in the matter of prestige."

Craven next asked whether Dr. Mott saw any danger to the freedom of the press in the licensing of stations owned by newspapers. He replied that it was "conceivable" that a newspaper, whose license was coming up for renewal, might change its attitude on some governmental question, "but this certainly would not be general."

After tracing the history of American journalism from the earliest times to 1914, which he called the start of the period of "great consolidations," Dr. Mott said:

"It seems very apparent that consolidations in a great many cities have given those cities better newspapers."

Dr. Mott testified that newspapers have never controlled electoral decisions.

In 39 Presidential elections, he testified, the winning candidate had the support of a majority of the newspapers 20 times.

Press Credited With Creating National Unity

Philadelphia, Jan. 22 (AP).—Walter D. Fuller, chairman of the board of the National Association of Manufacturers, credited the American press today with having created a national unit which will make the Nation invincible in war.

Asserting that "through our free press every section of the Nation has been put together with a web of understanding and discussion," Fuller told the Philadelphia Rotary Club, "that sort of national unity is bound to succeed."

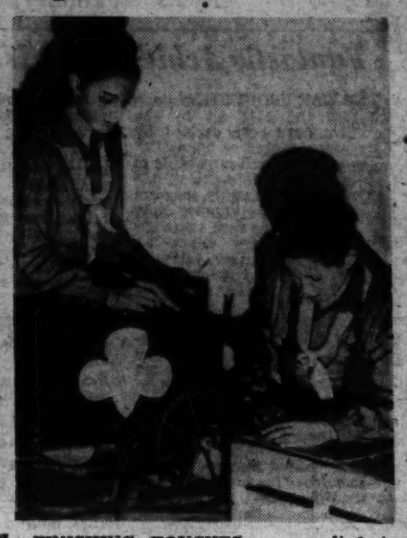
Girl Scout's Bike Squad Aids Defense



FINISHING TOUCHES are applied to home-made wagon by Jean Stoner, 12 (left), and Georgian Glenn

Twenty-eight wideawake Washington girls of Girl Scout Troop 16 at Potomac School, 2144 California Street Northeast, have organized salvage and messenger squads to aid civilian and national defense by collecting saleable waste materials and serving as neighborhood bicycle messengers.

The girls, ranging from 7 to 14, have developed an original scheme to reduce automobile wear and, if necessary, to replace them entirely, on important defense duties. The idea was born at a regular troop meeting and is entirely the girls'.

The salvage squad is made up of home-made wagons equipped with every imaginable wheel and chassis, and manned by the Girl Scouts who scour the Georgetown and Kalorama sections.

The collection system thought up by Mary Slocum, 13, daughter of Commander and Mrs. H. B. Slocum, Brighton Hotel, and Day Ely, 13, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Ely, 2419 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, is simple. Sections of the salvage squad pick up from scattered homes and deliver to key positions each Friday, the week's accumulation of waste; from these key spots, large collections are made on Saturday and delivered to whatever buyer has been selected.

The money the scouts get from the sales will be used to buy defense bonds and stamps or to be given to the Red Cross or some similar organization.

The messenger squad of 14 bicycles has, as members, those girls who have passed bike riding tests for speed and endurance. The cyclists are also trained in bicycle and tire repairing and are able map readers.

The girls deliver messages, medicines and any other light goods that might be urgently needed. When delivery work is light, however, the messenger squad will be kept busy aiding the wagon corps in its salvage work.

The guiding hand in these projects the girls have undertaken is Helen M. Seth-Smith, of Sorrey, England. Miss Seth-Smith, the troop leader, has been teaching and advising the scouts for the last two years.

Before that, she had 3½ years experience with the Girl Guides, a group in England such as our Girl Scouts.

Miss Seth-Smith stressed the value of the benefits that will result from the Girl Scouts ambitious program. She cited several instances during air raids in England when the Girl Guides, who are no better trained than our Girl Scouts, were called upon to aid families, whole neighborhoods and, even in some cases, hospitals.

The Life of Capt. Colin P. Kelly, Jr.

The Washington Post presents this series on the life of Colin P. Kelly, jr., from first-hand information given by the parents and the widow of the war hero, as well as boyhood friends and neighbors in his home town. The widow of Capt. Kelly, who has unsparingly given her services to the Red Cross, has declined all offers of remuneration as a result of her position after her husband's heroic death.

Chapter VI

He Was Bound to Be a Flier

By Carol Frink

As told by his Parents and Widow

MADISON, Fla., January 22.—The first time Pennywell Zipperer took any notice of Colin Kelly was when he saw the latter being soundly walloped by three larger boys.

Two of Colin's tormentors had him down pummeling him, while the third was methodically tearing pages from the magazines the smaller boy had been delivering.

Pennywell, three years Colin's senior, and a man-mountain even then, got off his bicycle and mixed in.

"It didn't look like a fair fight to me," Pennywell says, in his lazy Southern voice. "So I gave those three fellas a right smah't whippin'."

From that moment Colin and Penny were fast friends.

Colin was only 11, but even then he knew he was going to be an aviator, Penny says.

"Airplanes were mighty scarce in Madison in those days, and it was only once in a great while one would fly over town," said Penny.

"When we'd hear one flying over the school, we'd all jump up and run to the windows to see it. The teacher got right tired of that, after a while, and finally, when a plane came over she'd say:

"'Everybody keep his seat but Colin Kelly. No use trying to stop him!'"

Penny adds, with a deep chuckle: "Colin was going to see the plane or wreck the plan of salvation!"

ABOUT this time Colin enlisted the aid of Penny and Curry Merchant in an ambitious plan to build an airplane of their own. Penny says the craft never got much beyond an elaborate set of amateur blueprints and a pile of old lumber and a discarded tarpaulin, but the dream kept the three boys occupied during many a long, sunny Florida afternoon.

Curry tells about Colin's first view of a real, live aviator. It was Lindbergh.

"The Boy Scouts in Madison were being taken to Jacksonville to see Lindbergh when he was making his tour of the country after his flight across the ocean," Curry recalls. "I got left out—I was only 11, too young to join the scouts, but Colin had just turned 12, and when he heard about the trip, he joined up quick."

When Colin returned from that great adventure there was no holding him.

"I'll fly around the world some day," he announced, then. "And if somebody does it before I get big enough, then I'll do something else."

The story of Colin's first actual flight belongs to Pennywell. He was with him on the epochal occasion. Colin was 14 at the time.

"There was a flying circus in town," Penny begins. "It was one of those barnstorming troops—I think Bailey's.

"It cost $2.50 for a ten minute flight, and that was a heap of money in those days, but Colin and I scraped it up, nad went out to the local airfield to make the flight.

"Well, we made the flight all right," Penny continues. "I didn't care much about it one way or another, but Colin was all excited. When we got down again, he said to the pilot:

"'That was nothing. I thought you were going to scare us.'

"'Boys,' the pilot said, 'if you can get me five dollars apiece, I'll guarantee to scare you.'"

THE KELLY HOME 4 miles out of Madison, Fla. Colin lived here from infancy

THE boys were in a fix, Penny remembers. Colin would make that second flight, and while Penny wasn't particularly interested he'd do anything Colin wanted. But how to raise the incredible sum of ten dollars on such short notice?

"Just then we spied the class treasurer, David Maxwell," Penny recalls. "Colin looked at me, and I looked at him, and Maxwell didn't have a chance to escape.

"I think Colin would have negotiated that loan if he'd had to turn Maxwell upside down and shake the money out of him," Penny laughs.

On the second flight, the pilot took the boys south of town, and "gave them the works." He had told them he'd keep watching them, and when they quit grinning he'd quit stunting.

"My grin wore off with the first spin," Penny confesses. "But not Colin. Every time the pilot would look at him, he'd say, 'You ain't done nothin' yet—give'er the gun!' And, bang, over we'd go in another roll, leavin' my stomach a mile behind.

"It was an old crate, and it creaked and snapped and every minute I thought would be our last. I sure thought that trip would cure Colin, but it didn't. After that he was worse about airplanes than ever.

"And," Penny remembers, ruefully, "it took us nine months to pay back the class treasurer."

Penny Zipperer is a construction engineer now. He has been building airports lately, but just where is a military secret. He is a big, hearty fellow with an easy-going manner and a most picturesque speech. He says he wouldn't have his job now if it weren't for Colin.

"I was the Peck's bad boy of the school," Penny says. "I left school for two years and went to work. But Colin got me to go back. That's how we happened to be in the same class, though I was older. He told me about wanting to prepare for West Point, and said I ought to do it, too. We used to bone up on math together, and when we'd learned all the math they gave in our high school, Colin'd send away for books. When we graduated the principal said we two boys knew more math than he did."

Penny's present work takes him all over the country, and he doesn't get home to Madison very often. But it was no accident that he was there when the word came of Capt. Kelly's heroic death in the Pacific.

Penny had come to Madison to keep a 10-year-old tryst with Colin Kelly.

"There were 26 girls in our high school graduation class, and only eight boys," Penny explained. "We fellows had to stick together against all those girls, and we were all close friends. On graduation night Colin suggested we all get together in Madison in ten years to compare notes. He said we had to come no matter where we were. We fixed the date for January 1, 1942, and made a solemn pact to keep it.

"I hadn't heard from Colin lately, and I didn't know what part of the world he was in," Penny said. "But I knew, if it was humanly possible, Colin would keep the date. So I came. I can't tell you where I came from, but I can tell you I'd be clean out of the country by now but for that."

COLIN didn't show up for the planned dinner at the Madison Hotel—for reasons that the whole world now knows—but five of the boys did. One came from Miami for the purpose, and another boy came from the East Coast.

"It wasn't the kind of dinner party we'd been looking forward to for 10 years," Penny said. "But those of us who were there will never forget it. We spent the time talking about Colin, and remembering everything he used to do and say. We started out feeling pretty bad but then we got to thinking, if Colin was with us like he planned to be, he'd be making us all laugh. So we talked about the funny things Colin used to say, and pretty soon we were all laughing, too."

Colin's classmates plan to make the dinner an annual event, in his memory.

"Colin was the cleanest boy I've ever known," Penny said. "He never took a drink and he never smoked and I don't remember him even swearing. It wasn't because he thought he was better than any of the other boys, it was just that he was bound to be a flier, and he wanted to keep in condition for it.

"I loved Colin like a brother," Penny said.

A high school romance followed by a secret marriage to Rosalie Green, a classmate, kept Penny from fulfilling the ambitions he shared with Colin. He had to give up any thought of emulating Colin by trying for West Point.

"Colin was as fond of Rosalie as he was of me," Penny told me. "When he saw our first boy, he made us promise to send him to West Point.

"I never regretted my marriage," Penny says, loyally. "I've got three fine kids. But I'll tell you one thing—if I could've been any place in the world I wanted to on December 11, there isn't any place I'd rather've been than in that plane with Colin!"

'The Bugle Sounds' Call To Comedy at the Capitol

Wallace Beery Stars in One of His Best Roles, With a Top-Drawer Cast in Rousing Support; New Stage Revue Is of All-Star Caliber

WITH THE AVOWED PURPOSE of paying a ringing tribute to the officers and men of the United States Army, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer still has shrewdly maneuvered the production of an amusing and consistently interesting melodramatic comedy in "The Bugle Sounds," the current screen attraction at Loew's Capitol Theater.

The mechanization of the Army's cavalry units provides the "plot" of the picture. An overlaid pattern of comedy, cut to the ample measurements of Wallace Beery and Marjorie Main, furnishes the design of its major trend, with a lifelong cavalryman's love of his horse to supply a brief touch of pathos and Sergt. Doan's heroic defeat of a spy plan to sabotage a trainload of tanks to round the thing off in a blaze of glory.

Although its sketchy outline might suggest something of the form and foolishness of Jimmy Durante's recent "You're in the Army Now," under no circumstances is "The Bugle Sounds" to be confused in form or intent with the tidal wave of slapstick service comedies that began to reach full flood with Abbott and Costello's "Buck Privates." It is, to be sure, preponderantly a comedy that is on view at the Capitol, but one with a deep underlying motive and a respectful regard for the stability and the tradition of the country's armed forces.

Opening with a commentator's voice in a resounding salute to the character, valor and steadfastness of the enlisted and commissioned soldier, the action proceeds through a brief sequence of field maneuvers to the breaking of the news to the colonel of the regiment, who has commanded horse troops since the pre-World War days on the border, that his model command has been selected as the one to demonstrate with what efficiency a veteran outfit can transfer itself from four-footed mounts to caterpillar tanks. This is catastrophe—the end of the world—no less, to Sergt. Doan. From that point out, the picture is principally the case history of the saddle-broken top-kick, who finds himself beginning all over again, learning a new type of warfare himself and teaching it to the trainees poured into his lap by the Selective Service Act. Apparently A. W. O. L., after his horse, Cantigny, has had to be destroyed after a fire set by a flaming tank, "Hap" Doan actually has been laying the groundwork for the single-handed coup that turns up the saboteurs in a very tasty gun fight. Decorating this basic theme is that constant flow of comedy, a dash or two of youthful romance and the authentic routine of trained troops. It all adds up to the most satisfactory vehicle Wallace Beery has had in many a long day—shot through with transparent flag-waving, or not.

Beery "Hard-Boiled" Sentimentalist

In his serio-comic impersonation of the sentimental, "hard-boiled" noncom, Beery is legitimately comic without ever permitting himself to be grotesque. He is an agreeable and lovable fellow—and a swell soldier. Although her opportunities are not quite so abundant, Marjorie Main is far more effective here, as the woman Doan never can quite find the time to marry, than she was in "Barnacle Bill." "Honky Tonk" afforded her the companion role to her present one. Lewis S. Stone, a veteran of the Spanish-American War and still active in the military, is ideally cast as the colonel, with Henry O'Neill as his next in command. The dirty work is intrusted to the capable deviltry of George Bancroft and Jerome Cowan and Donna Reed acquits herself well in the ingenue assignment. Everyone in the cast acquits himself well, as a matter of fact.

For the Capitol stage this week, Gene Ford has whipped up a bill that is genuinely all-star. With the orchestra on stage and Sam Jack Kaufman serving as master of ceremonies through the half-way point, Harry King and Arlena, two of the best of the tap dancers, open the proceedings, followed by Hector and His Pals, the most informal and irresistible dog act of them all. The Colstons, boy and girl, must be the closest rivals of The Hartmans in satirizing the dance, and Cross and Dunn and Paul Gerrits, of course, Washington already knows as tops in their fields. Picking up the emceeing where Sam Jack drops it, the suave Mr. Gerrits offers first a new bit dedicated to nervous diners and then executes his remarkable feats of comedy on roller skates. Cross and Dunn redemonstrate that there is not another singing team on the contemporary stage that can get within gunshot of them. In the absence of the Rhythm Rockets, Lynn Allison's delightful singing of Jerome Kern's "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," from "Roberta," elaborated by the orchestra in an exceptional overture arrangement, and the Fox Movietone News complete the elegant bill.

HEDDA HOPPER

By Any Other Name!

Hollywood, Jan. 22.—Marjorie Reynolds (Mrs. Jack Reynolds), who is playing the lead in the Fred Astaire-Bing Crosby starrer, "Holiday Inn," has worked under three monickers during her screen career, and studio's now hunting her a new one, due to the Hollywood tradition that a married star never uses her husband's name. This may sound a bit goofy, but although "that which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet" is a lovely thought, I doubt if even a rose would take a chance on it.

CLAUDETTE COLBERT

Suppose your neighborhood exhibitor announced a super-feature with the following all-star cast: Frances Gumm, Lily Chauchoin, Melvyn Hesselberg, Caroline Copp, Benny Kubelsky, Frank Wupperman, William Dunkenfield and William Beedle, with music by Izzy Baline. Just how many of you would buy a ticket? But if you saw their screen names crowded on one marquee, you'd run, not walk, to get there early, because they'd be Judy Garland, Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas, Carolyn Lee, Jack Benny, Frank Morgan, W. C. Fields, and Bill Holden, with music by Irving Berlin! So why shouldn't actors change their names? Even little Mr. Schickelgruber changed his to "Hitler" when he became stage-truck and tried to get the world by the tail.

Other day Charles Laughton, Sailor Jon Hall and Eskimo Mala spent the whole day doing scenes for "Tuttles for Tahiti" in the ranch tank. Only Charles (Capt. Bligh) Laughton rode out the storm without getting seasick!

It's a producer's job Al Jolson is after, and I hear he has one practically cinched

George M. Cohan, while convalescing, has written another war song, called "For the Flag, For the Home, For the Family." It's a honey.

With so many men being drafted, many of the top-name hands are thinning out, so a place will be made to order for musical gals. Martha Raye may form a girls' swing band. Anyway she's thinking it over.

The Dixie National Co. is making a picture with an all-colored cast—a murder mystery, "For Creeps' Sake." That should be something, or I miss my guess!

Siapsie Maxie's agent told him about a man who never looked at a girl, smoked a cigaret, nor took a drink, and lived to be 96. "Aw, he didn't live that long," said Maxie. "It only seemed that long!"

LEONARD LYONS

Caught Out on a Foul!

New York, Jan. 22.

Katharine Cornell, her husband, Guthrie McClintic, and Margalo Gillmore went to a club where an unusual show was being presented. It was a foul place, which reeked of evil. The gags were of the most objectionable type—and so were the entertainers. The McClintics and Miss Gillmore rushed out, as quickly as they could . . . On the sidewalk they saw a prostrate drunk. His clothes were all disheveled and messy. "Come on, let's get away from here," said McClintic . . . Miss Gillmore, still shocked by the entertainment she had seen, hesitated a while. "No, let's wait here," she suggested. "After what we saw inside, I find this very refreshing."

Mayor LaGuardia will make another report to the citizens of New York in a broadcast next week . . . Elizabeth Bergner, who appeared in the radio playlet, "In This Strange Land," for the OEM series, will play the same role, in German, for Col. Donovan's short-wave broadcast to Nazi Germany . . . The Cafe Society Uptown and Downtown shows will be presented at Carnegie Hall, Symphony Hall in Boston, Academy of Music in Philadelphia and the Chicago Opera House—on successive Sundays, for the benefit of Allied War Relief . . . Richard Aldrich, the theatrical producer and husband of Gertrude Lawrence, joined the Navy this week.

Lieut. John T. Casey of the U. S. Navy addressed the New York State publishers in Syracuse yesterday. His subject was naval censorship. Casey illustrated his thesis by telling of two Irishmen at a bar, listening to radio announcements of submarine activity . . . "Ireland hazsha greatesht Navy in the whole world, the whole world," proclaimed the first . . . "Yeah," agreed his colleague. 'The Irish Navy can lick all other naviesh—all other" . . . "Is that so?" challenged a listener. "Name one battleship owned by Ireland" . . . The two men glared at him, then chorused: "Spy, eh?"

Don Hartman, the movie writer who is coauthor of the play, "All in Favor," will attend the premiere of that show tonight, but will not wait for the drama notices. He will leave for Hollywood on the 11:30 train. "If the notices are bad," he explained, "I don't want to hear about them. And if they're good, I'll have an exciting trip" . . . Hartman is a former actor who was the original Andy Hardy in the Broadway production of "Skidding." To take this role, he left an art group headed by Ouspenskaya and Richard Bolesewski. They came to see him play Andy Hardy—a fool-proof role—and listened to the audience laugh. "Never have we heard an audience laugh so much," they reported to Hartman later, "at an actor who was so awful."

Floyd Odlum told the Ways and Means Committee that one way of helping the small businessmen, who are losing their businesses because of priorities in war materials, is to declare a moratorium on their 1941 taxes . . . "Joe Smith, American," was previewed here last night. By all means see it . . . Leo Mishkin, as movie critic and editor at the Morning Telegraph, is the direct superior of Whitney Bolton, the movie columnist for that paper. Mishkin now has an additional job, as a member of the publicity staff of David O. Selznick Productions. There, his direct superior is Selznick's publicity man, the same Whitney Bolton.

Because of the concerted drive against gambling in Florida, possession of betting slips by any handbook operators or their agents results in a prison sentence. Recently, in a Florida hotel, a young messenger was arrested. He pleaded guilty to the charge of possessing gambling slips. On sentence day, while he was awaiting his turn at court, he heard a group of other gambling defendants, all of whom had pleaded guilty, receive sentences of two years in jail . . . Then came a defendant who pleaded guilty to a homicide which was somewhat justifiable. He received an eight-month sentence. When the messenger's turn arrived, he asked the court for permission to change his plea—from the possession of handbook slips to homicide.

Clubs Federation Opens Four-Day Conference Today

The General Federation of Women's Clubs swings into a full-time war program, with the opening meeting today of its four-day conference, now in session at the Mayflower Hotel.

A military defense forum from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m., with Honorable Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy, Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff, United States Army; Brig. Gen. Donald Connolly, administrator of Civil Aeronautics; Miss Julia C. Stimson, president, American Nursing Association, and Miss Mary Beard, director, nursing service, American Red Cross, will highlight the day's events.

With Mrs. Roosevelt presiding, a forum session on civil defense will feature the night program, 8:30 to 10:30 p. m. Speakers will be from the United States Office of Civilian Defense. They are: Miss Eloise Davison, assistant director; Miss Jane Seaver, youth member, Voluntary Participation Division; Mr. James P. Kirby, chief, press relation section; Brig. Gen. L. D. Gasser, War Department member, Board for Civilian Protection, and Miss Wilmer Shields, Community Voluntary Service.

The morning session, 10 a. m. to 12:15 p. m., will be devoted to business and committee reports. Department chairmen will meet for luncheon at 12:30 p. m. and from 6 to 8 p. m. The State presidents and directors will meet for dinner. At this time will be heard the reports of various States.

Children In Wartime

This is one of a series of parent's questions answered by the Child Study Association of America.

Schooling or Service? Which?

WHAT can we do for our children who cannot see the sense of going to school or college right now? Even the boys and girls of high school age are impatient about school and insist that they want to do something about the war.

THEIR feeling is natural. We all want to do something about it and wish we knew what. Yet very many of all ages can make their best contribution by going on with their regular work. Many young people should be encouraged to serve directly. Others of high school or even college age will, for the present at least, serve their country best by continuing and in some cases intensifying their school work. Parents and teachers can rightfully point out to them how great the need will be for a generation trained and equipped to make a good peace and to rebuild a shattered world. School people have already begun to see that their work cannot go on as if nothing unusual were happening. Studies of many kinds will have to be redirected so that school work will be more meaningful to youth in a world at war.

Yet we must expect these boys and girls to be restless and to demand some immediate part in the war effort. The best thought of our various youth organizations—Scouts, Y's, boys' clubs, Campfire Girls, etc.—should be given to finding ways of directing into useful community work the young people's energies and enthusiasms and capacity for high devotion. And parents and teachers should do their best to encourage the boys and girls to join in such projects.

For the young people in college—especially the boys of military age—the problem may be even more difficult. We can tell them how great will be the country's need for educated men in the days to come. But to many boys its present need for soldiers will seem more urgent. Combining study and military training in the R. O. T. C. will be a satisfactory compromise for many. To others immediate enlistment will seem the only course. Each must make his decision in accordance with his own conscience. For many the choice will be a difficult one. As parents we have not the right to interfere or to burden them further with doubts and reproaches. We have to recognize, too, that for many the opportunity to do war work is a welcome liberation from an otherwise meaningless or disagreeable program.

Club Roundup

Pioneer Good Neighbor Tells of Early Efforts to Draw Americas Together

By Suzanne

BACK in 1935, as chairman of the International Relations Department of the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. Nancy Rupley Armstrong, of Houston, proposed a Woman's Pan-American Goodwill Conference to be held in the United States.

Club women sanctioned, the State Department approved heartily. "But it failed," she said, "because the business interests felt it immature and unessential at the time. In short, we couldn't swing it financially."

MRS. NANCY RUPLEY ARMSTRONG

When handsome Mrs. Armstrong was in South America (she flew down and around) the natives asked: "Can we trust the United States?" Upon her return home, our people asked: "Can we trust the Latin Americans?"

"Our attitude has been wrong," said Mrs. Armstrong. "We have been too smug. True hemispheric solidarity must be built upon a mutual understanding of cultures and ways of living. Lasting friendship only can be created by understanding and appreciation."

Knee deep in plans for Western hemispheric solidarity, Pan American forums, exchange of students, etc., Mrs. Armstrong, now chairman of the International Relations Department of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, which is opening a four-day conference at the Mayflower Hotel today, has been promoting better relations with our Latin-American neighbors long before the "good neighbor policy" was inaugurated.

Not since school days has her zest for promoting better international relations wavered. In fact, because Columbia University was the only school (at that time)) where a woman could major in international relations, she left her native Texas and joined the students at that institution.

"College students should be made conscious of the necessity for promoting better relationships with the Latin-American countries," said Mrs. Armstrong. "When exchange students enter our schools, American students should do all within their power to make them feel at home. That means including them in their clubs and fraternities. No foreign student should be made to feel that he or she is "left out" of close, friendly groups. Where true friendships have been built, battleships are never needed."

Federation Asks Laws

AT ITS meeting yesterday, the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs passed a series of resolutions that originated with the Takoma Park Women's Clubs. They would have the U. S. Congress pass legislation that would insure "an equal sacrifice of all civilian groups . . . establish price levels on agricultural commodities . . . abolish unreasonable war-time profits . . . adopt a national policy regarding wage increases for labor based on cost of living index. Speaker for the day was R. S. Camalier, counsel for Senate District of Columbia Committee.

Mrs. Doak Gets Guard

MRS. WILLIAM N. DOAK, guest of the District of Columbia League of Republican Women at their luncheon meeting yesterday, told the members of her endeavors to aid defense. When soldiers were sent to guard the Chain Bridge and started to pitch their tents down by the edge of the river, Mrs. Doak invited them to come up on the hillside where her home is situated and camp. They accepted the invitation . . . now both the bridge and her home are guarded safely. . . . Mrs. Chris Carlson, Republican National Committeewoman from Wisconsin, guest speaker of the day, urged self-analysis to determine the spot where women can do the most good for national defense. "Don't gum the works and don't be a square peg in a round hole," she said. Adopt the slogan, "Victory Depends on Me" . . . survival depends upon keeping a level head.

D. A. R. Undaunted

UNDAUNTED by the crowded conditions of Washington, the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, will hold its usual congress at Constitution Hall, Mrs. William H. Pooch, president general, announced. The Daughters are already working on plans to find quarters for the delegates.

Club Buys Bonds

NEWCOMB CLUB of Bethesda, Md., at its regular meeting recently, voted to buy four Defense Bonds in the name of the Student Loan. The loan fund, known as the "Mary Fulford Foster Loan Fund," named for a member, now amounts to over $1300, is being used by five students in different colleges. Additional amounts are held intact for other students.

Cupid Hits Career Girls

PLAINLY tagged marriage—Cupid's arrows are darting right into the midst of Kappa Chapter, Beta Sigma Phi Sorority. Miss Gretchen Giddings, past chapter president and vice president of the D. C. Council, now living in Portland, Oreg., soon will announce her marriage to Ralph Jones, also of Portland. And Miss Thora Forsell, of Kappa Chapter, soon will march down the aisle with Fred Mohler.

75th Club Elects

MRS. LAURENCE F. ARNOLD, wife of the Illinois Representative, succeeds Mrs. Luther Patrick, of Alabama, to the presidency of the Seventy-fifth Club. Other officers elected at the annual meeting of the club yesterday are Mrs. James H. Hughes, of Delaware, first vice president; Mrs. Lyle H. Baren, Oklahoma, second vice president; Mrs. Vincent F. Harrington, Iowa, third vice president; Mrs. Jerry Voorhis, California, secretary; Mrs. W. R. Poague, Texas, treasurer. Membership in the club is restricted to the wives of Congressmen who came to Washington in the Seventy-fifth Congressional year.

Wartime Slogan

THE SEVENTEENTH Women's Patriotic Defense Conference, meeting this week, adopted the following war cry:

"With the red blood of Americanism—
The white purity of Idealism and
The blue radiance of Patriotism—
We follow the Stars of Old Glory."

Mrs. Margaret Hopkins Worrell, president general of the Wheels of Progress, suggested this slogan.

'Tailor-Made' Speeches

Shadow Plays for China

WITH A LIST of patronesses headed by Mme. T. V. Soong, Mme. Sze, Mme. T. S. Shih, Mme. Chu and Mrs. Ray Perrin McNair, the Sidwell Friends School will sponsor a performance Wednesday night at the school gymnasium by the Red Gate Players of New York, of Chinese Shadow Plays for the benefit of United China Relief.

All friends of China and of the work of the Friends Society will be welcome to the performance. Mrs. Emmet C. Gudger, who is chairman of the Parents' Auxiliary of the Sidwell Friends School, is heading the school's list of patronesses for the event.

Hollywood Focuses Its 'Range-Finder'

BARBARA MOFFETT, rodeo performer and showgirl, will do all of her range-riding on the screen, now. The blonde, 16-year-old native of Minneapolis was sighted by a range-roving film scout and got a contract with RKO-Radio. It is easy to see why she wasn't overlooked

Mrs. Roosevelt Fetes Students On Tour Here

Nine Colgate University students had tea with Mrs. Roosevelt at the White House yesterday as the finale to four months of trying to find out what the Government is all about.

For a semester the students have been devoting their energies to investigation of Government agencies; holding seminar discussions; writing papers; spending two hours each morning in formal classes, and talking it all over with Government officials.

Principal criticism members of this unique class made yesterday on administration of governmental agencies was this: Failure of these agencies to educate the public as to the purpose of their existence.

Further, they suggested that high school students would learn much more about what its Government is doing if they had available real political science courses rather than the "civic" courses now in vogue.

Students in the course, the brain child of Dr. Paul S. Jacobson, associate professor of political science at Colgate, live at the Y. M. C. A. while here. The course was originated in 1935.

There were ten of the students this semester before Raymond Meade Douglas, 20 years old, of Hamilton, N. Y., dropped out early in November to join the Canadian antiaircraft forces.

All the youths, happily, passed the final exams they took yesterday morning.

Rites Tomorrow For G. W. Miller, Hospital Employe

George W. Miller, 64, superintendent of Gallinger Hospital buildings and grounds, died yesterday at his home, 1635 Potomac Avenue Southeast, after a long illness.

Mr. Miller had been connected with the hospital 11 years. Previously he was employed by the District Health Department.

He was a native of Washington and a World War veteran, having gone to France as a corporal with the A. E. F. Funeral services will be held tomorrow at Fort Myer Chapel, with burial in Arlington Cemetery.

His wife, Mrs. Nina O. Miller, survives.

Pennsylvania Bank President Dies

Mount Union, Pa., Jan. 22 (AP).—J. Frank Adams, 73, president of the Central National Bank in this Huntington County community and former State Senator in Colorado, died yesterday. He had been ill several months.

A graduate of Princeton, he lived in Denver, Colo., for 30 years. He was a member of the Colorado State House of Representatives, the State Senate and chairman of the Denver Draft Board during the first World War. He returned to Mount Union 20 years ago.

Viereck's Counsel Seeks Change of Venue

the press about Viereck during his trial.

Viereck is an admitted agent of the official Nazi propaganda organization, German Library of Information, who disclosed that he was paid a high salary and had a fat expense account to use in this country.

The special grand jury on Axis agents indicted him last October 7, charging incomplete registration under the Foreign Agent Act. The indictment said he did not reveal his publishing activities and his stratagem of writing speeches and supplying material to House and Senate members, later arranging for this propaganda to be mailed under Congressional frank.

Following Viereck's indictment his lawyers, Daniel P. Cohalen, jr., and Emil Morosini, jr., New York, maneuvered to avert a hasty trial and later to have the case heard before Goldsborough. After being set for January 5 before Justice F. Dickinson Letts, the case was put off to make way for the trial of Rrepresentative Hamilton Fish's secretary, George Hill, 45, who was convicted of perjury last week.

Special Prosecutors William Power Maloney and Edward J. Hickey, jr., agreed with Viereck's lawyers to start the trial February 2. Last week Goldsborough sent for the prosecutors and ordered them to be ready in five days. Maloney said in a sworn statement that when he told Goldsborough such haste would injure the Government the judge replied that he did not "give a ——— about the Government's position."

On Monday Maloney filed an affidavit that Goldsborough was prejudiced, demanding that another judge be assigned. Goldsborough refused and made a long statement in court in which he denied he was "arbitrary," but did not deny the language attributed to him.

Next day, while the six justices of the United States Court of Appeals here were considering the Government's petition to order Goldsborough out of the case he yielded, agreeing to have another judge try the case February 4. The affidavit of bias was withdrawn.

Viereck's counsel recited all this in their motion to move the trial out of Washington. They complained that they were not in court when Goldsborough made the deal to have the charges against him dropped.

Contending that Viereck could not possibly get a fair trial in Washington, the motion said:

"That the said William Power Maloney was seen by defendant's counsel in conversation, after most if not all of the hearings had in this case, with a reporter for The Washington Post, a daily morning newspaper of wide circulation in the District of Columbia, and that there were published in said newspaper news stories on January 20 and 21, 1942, copies of which are attached hereto and made a part hereof, giving an inaccurate, incomplete and prejudicial account of what took place in the court before Mr. Justice Goldsborough, and there also was published in the said Washington Post an editorial in the issue of Wednesday, January 21, 1942, a copy of which is attached hereto, and which is likewise inaccurate, incomplete and prejudicial to the defendant. Defendant's counsel is informed and believes that similar news stories concerning these proceedings were published on January 20 and 21, 1942, in other newspapers of wide circulation in the said District of Columbia. All of which tends, and, as the defendant verily believes,

The fourth prayer of the motion was intended to overawe the court and to prejudice the minds of any possible jurors before whom the defendant could be tried in the District of Columbia."

"That, in any event, William Power Maloney and all other agents and officers of the United States be enjoined and restrained from giving interviews, releases or holding conferences with representatives of the press concerning this case, before, after or during the daily progress of the trial of said case, and in making this prayer defendant further says that he has no objection to the press reporting the trial as it actually takes place in the courtroom."

In connection with these prayers, two news stories and an editorial were presented with the motion.

After asking that the trial be sent elsewhere or postponed until the "hostility engendered against him (Viereck) by reason of the facts aforesaid" disappeared, the motion asked:

"That in event both of the foregoing prayers are denied, there be rescinded and set for naught any attempt to withdraw the affidavit of prejudice filed as aforesaid in this case, and that there be set aside and held for naught any agreement or action whatsoever to have this case tried before any justice other than as reaffirmed in the proceedings of January 19, 1942, in this case."

The proceedings referred to were those in which Goldsborough refused to get out of the case and formally reaffirmed his determination to try it starting Wednesday, January 21.

Goldsborough will not hear the motions submitted yesterday. After they were filed he referred them to Justice Letts or Justice James W. Morris, one of whom will have charge of the Viereck matter from now on.

Post's Recipe Contest Features Thrift Meals

By Martha Ellyn
The Post Food Editor

THE DAYS of abundance and leisure are fading fast. But out of the necessity to economize on the food budget comes some mighty fine eating. The Post recipe contestants in this month's contest, the theme of which is "Thrift Dinners," have shown the way to appealing meals that are nutritious, attractive and easy on the pocketbook.

Here are the contest winners and recipes used in their menus:

Martha Ellyn

Mrs. Mary Ott, 2480 Sixteenth Street Northwest, winner of the first prize of $10, uses the perennial favorite among meat dishes—the pot roast of beef—as the pivotal dish around which she builds her thrift meal. This cut of meat owes its popularity to the great variety which can be given it by different vegetables and even fruits cooked and served with it. Mrs. Ott has used rice as the starchy food to be eaten with the pot roast. For variety she suggests cooking apricots with the rice, for the flavor blends deliciously with that of the meat.

Thrift Dinner Menu

Pot Roast of Beef
Rice with Apricots
Buttered Carrots
Whole Wheat Bread Butter
Custard Rice Pudding
Coffee Milk

The pot roast may be cut from the chuck, rolled plate, heel of round or the rump. These are the directions for cooking the pot roast:

Pot Roast—Buy a 3 to 4 pound pot roast. Place the pot roast kettle over moderate heat for 5 minutes. Place the roast in the kettle, cut side down, and brown thoroughly and slowly on both ends and all sides for 20 minutes. Do not hurry the browning. Add 1 sliced onion during the last 10 minutes of browning. Turn the heat as low as possible, add 3 to 4 teaspoons salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and 1½ cups boiling water. Cover and simmer, but do not allow to boil, for 3½ hours or until tender. If cover of kettle fits tight, no extra water will be needed. Remove roast and thicken the gravy with 2 tablespoons flour mixed smooth with 1 cup water. If there is excess fat on top of broth, skim it off before thickening gravy. Serve on preheated platter, surrounded with rice that has been cooked with apricots.

Navy beans and ham hocks team on the menu submitted by Mrs. Harold G. Kissick, 4028 Eighth Street Northeast, to win the second prize of $5. Here is her menu and two of the recipes:

Navy Beans and Ham Hock—Soak ½ pound navy beans and 3 pounds of ham hock together in cold water for several hours. Drain off the water two hours before the dinner hour, cover with fresh water, bring to a boil and simmer slowly until serving time. No seasoning will be necessary.

Harvard Beets—Open 1 medium-size can of beets. Heat in juice. Salt and pepper to taste. Mix 3 tablespoons flour, 1-3 cup sugar and 1 tablespoon vinegar with enough water to form a thin paste. Stir slowly into the hot beets, stirring constantly and cook for 5 minutes.

Mrs. Charles N. Malone, Woodley Park Towers, 2737 Devonshire Place Northwest, wins the third prize of $3 with her menu built around a dinner that has the advantage of requiring little time just before serving time because some of the items can be prepared earlier in the day and reheated. Chief among the economies of Mrs. Malone's menu is the use of chicken wings, which may now be bought at market by the pound very reasonably, and which serve as well as a whole fowl would in making up the main dish.

Thrift Dinner Menu

Tomato Juice Cocktail with Lemon
Creamed Chicken with Mushrooms and Dumplings
Vegetables in Aspic Wafers
Steamed Spice Cake Wine Sauce
Coffee Tea Milk

Creamed Chicken with Mushrooms and Dumplings—Boil in water to cover, 2 pounds of meaty chicken wings. Cook until very tender, about 1 hour for young chicken wings. Remove the meat and discard the skin and bones. Thicken the stock, about 2 cupfuls, with 4 tablespoons flour stirred into 1 cup of cream, until smooth. A raw egg added to the cream and flour makes a valuable addition but is not necessary. Add to the sauce, with the chicken, a cup of fresh mushrooms which have been sauted until brown in 2 tablespoons butter. Add 1 hard-cooked egg, cut in quarters. Season to taste with salt and pepper and add a little nutmeg. If green peas are not used in the salad use 1/3 cup. Set chicken off the stove and prepare the dumplings as follows:

Dumplings—Add 4 teaspoons baking powder and a little salt to 2 cups of general-purpose flour and sift. Mix to a soft, rough dough with milk enough to make it hang together, and lift by spoonfuls quickly into a quantity of actively boiling water. Steam, tightly covered, for about 20 minutes. Take care not to allow the dumplings to touch one another, and allow a little for swelling as they cook so that the dumplings will not stick together and be shapeless. Cook slowly, just simmer. Serve the hot chicken on deep platter surrounded by ring of dumplings. Sprinkle over all a little of the chicken gravy and chopped parsley and paprika.

The following are the winners of the ten $1 prizes.

Mrs. Roscoe Applegate
5176 Fulton St. N.W.

Thrift Oven Dinner

Corned Beef Souffle
Baked Irish Potatoes
Buttered Peas
Lettuce Wedges—French Dressing
Baked Stuffed Apples
Gingerbread

The recipe for the Corned Beef Souffle is as follows:

Corned Beef Souffle—Melt 2 tablespoons butter and fry in it, until clear, 1 large diced onion. Add 2 tablespoons flour and enough milk to make a stiff sauce. Cook until thick. Beat in 3 egg yolks, dash cayenne and nutmeg, 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, 1 tablespoon lemon juice and 1 can shredded corned beef. Add 3 beaten egg whites and bake for 1 hour at 350 degrees. This dish may be prepared ahead of time by reserving the egg whites and adding them just before baking time. Serve with the following sauce:

Danish Sauce—Mix ½ cup mayonnaise with juice of ½ lemon, 1 egg yolk and add to 1 cup medium white sauce. Heat for 1 minute.

Mrs. Robert E. Burns
2480 16th St. N.W.

Fluffy Codfish Balls
Catsup Green Peas
Whole Wheat Bread Butter
Mixed Vegetable Cole Slaw
Chocolate Bread Pudding
Milk Tea Coffee

The recipe for the fish dish serves six persons and is as follows:

Fluffy Codfish Balls—Cut 1½ cups packaged salt codfish in pieces. Dice 3 cups potatoes in uniform pieces with codfish: Drop into boiling water and boil rapidly until potatoes are cooked but not mush. Drain and return to cooking utensil over burner and shake to free from excess moisture. Mash thoroughly with fork, add ⅛ teaspoon pepper, 1 teaspoon butter and 1 beaten egg and beat thoroughly. Drop by small spoonfuls into hot deep fat, frying not more than 4 balls at a time. Cook until evenly browned, turning once. Place on paper toweling in pan and keep in warm over until all the balls are fried.

Mrs. H. F. King
2305 N. Fillmore St.
Arlington, Va.

1-Burner Thrift Dinner Menu

Tomato Juice Cocktail
American Stew
Avocado Salad
Bread and Butter
Steamed Apples Milk

Mrs. King suggests buying 1½ pounds of cube meat of the inexpensive cuts of beef, veal or lamb, to be based upon prevailing market value. The following is her recipe for making the stew:

American Stew—Mix 1 teaspoon salt with 3 tablespoons flour. Sprinkle over the meat cubes. Heat 1 tablespoon salvaged bacon or other fat in bottom of double boiler; brown the floured meat in the fat. Add ¼ cup hot water. Cover quickly with top of double boiler and steam over low flame until meat is tender. Then place 8 medium-sized carrots, scraped and quartered; 5 small silver onions, peeled, and 5 medium-size peeled potatoes on top of the meat. Continue to simmer until vegetables are tender.

Mrs. A. R. Walden
5386 Earlson Drive
Yorktown Village, Md.

Thrift Dinner Menu

Hot Tomato Bouillon
Roast Pork Shoulder
Browned Potatoes
Riced Carrots with Parsley
Mixed Green Salad
Corn Sticks Winter Relish
Apple Fluff

Mrs. Walden finds fresh pork shoulder a good buy, as it sells for around 19 to 21 cents a pound. She prepares it the following way:

Roast Pork Shoulder—Rub the outside of a 4-pound roast with flour, salt and pepper and a dash of sage. Cover with onion circles and bake in open pan in a slow oven, 325 degrees, for about 35 minutes to the pound. If preferred, have butcher bone and then stuff with bread dressing.

Apple Fluff—To 1 large can of apple sauce add 1 small can of whipped evaporated milk, nutmeg, sugar and cinnamon to taste and a few chopped nuts. If the budget can afford it, it is nice to split lady fingers, line sherbet glasses with them, filling center with apple mixture. Chill well, but do not freeze. Garnish with grated orange peel saved from the orange juice at breakfast.

Miss Norma Mazo.
2121 H Street Northwest.

Tomato Juice
Meat Loaf
Spinach Loaf Baked Potatoes
Green Salad Rolls
Fruit Salad Tea Coffee

Miss Mazo takes advantage of the price of ground meat to make up an economical meal. Here is her winning menu and recipe:

Meat Loaf—Buy 1 pound of ground round steak. Shred and soften 2 slices of bread in a little milk and mix them in the ground round steak together with a small grated onion, salt and pepper to taste and a dash of ketchup. After this has been thoroughly mixed, add 1 egg and mix again thoroughly. Place mixture in a greased baking dish with a cover. Bake in medium oven for 35 to 40 minutes. Serves 4.

Spinach Loaf—Drain water from 1 small can of spinach. Mix with 1 teaspoon salt and dash of pepper and 2 tablespoons melted butter. Add 1 egg to mixture. Mix all thoroughly, then place mixture into a greased baking dish that has a cover. Bake at the same time as meat loaf for the same period of time. Serves 4.

Mrs. Paul Espenshade.
P. O. Box 85.
Fort Belvoir, Va.

Thrift Dinner Menu

Baked Salmon
Corn Pudding Baked Potatoes
Tomato Aspic Salad
Hot Biscuits Coffee
Orange Pudding

Bake salmon, the corn pudding and potatoes in the oven at the same time along with the baked orange dessert gives the cook free time once it is in the oven. Here is the recipe for the baked salmon:

Baked Salmon—Flake and remove the bones and skin from 1 can salmon. Save the liquid. To the salmon add 2 small cups cornflakes, ½ onion chopped, salt and pepper. Mix well and put into a buttered baking dish. Bake in oven at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Serve with lemon slices. Serves 6.

Miss Elizabeth Hansbraugh,
Box 171, Warrenton, Va.

Thrift Dinner Menu

Sauerkraut With Meat Balls
Potatoes Cooked in Jackets
Apple-Celery-Grape Salad
Butterscotch Pan Dumplings
Coffee

To make the meat balls, Miss Hansbraugh suggests buying ½ pound each of ground beef, veal and pork. Then follow these directions:

Sauerkraut With Meat Balls—Combine meats, 1 small, chopped onion and 1 clove garlic, salt and pepper, 1 beaten egg, 2 tablespoons bread crumbs, ⅓ cup uncooked rice and ½ cup water. Form into small balls and brown in hot fat in Dutch oven. Cover and cook slowly for 2 hours with 1 No. 2½ can sauerkraut and 1 10½-ounce can tomato soup. Serves 6.

Mrs. W. D. Termohlen,
6638 Thrty-second Place Northwest.

Thrift Dinner Menu

Baked Beef Liver en Casserole
Escalloped Potatoes
Butered Carrots and Celery
Baked Apples Cookies
Coffee Milk

Beef liver at the interesting price of around 25 cents makes up the main dish of Mrs. Termohlen's winning menu. Her menu and recipe for cooking liver follow:

Baked Liver—Take the membrane from five slices of beef liver and trim off unedible parts. Salt slightly, pepper and dust well with flour. Dice three slices of bacon and fry crisp in a heavy skillet. Remove the bacon and put into casserole. Brown the liver in fat in skillet, using moderate heat. When brown, put in casserole and then saute half cup chopped onions in the remainifig fat for 5 minutes. Add ¾ cup boiling water and cook a minute or two longer and pour over liver in casserole. Cover and bake at 350 degrees for 1 hour.

Mrs. John D. Swisher,
1363 Salem Avenue,
Hagerstown, Md.

Thrift Dinner Menu

Savory Veal Roast
Baked Potatoes
Glazed Carrots
Yum Yum Salad
Plum Roll Coffee

The plum roll is made from canned purple plums. Mrs. Swisher's recipe follows:

Plum Roll—Drain one No. 2 can purple plums. Remove pits and cut in coarse pieces. Put the sirup from plums, 4 tablespoons sugar and 2 tablespoons butter in a baking pan and bring to a boil on high heat. Sift together 2 cups sifted all-purpose flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder, 2 tablespoons granulated sugar, and cut in 4 tablespoons shortening. Combine 1 well-beaten egg with half cup milk and mix to soft dough. Roll to ½-inch thickness. Spread with chopepd plums and roll up like a jelly roll. Cut in 1-inch slices. Place slices, cut-side down, in the hot sirup. Bake for 1 hour with the meal or 30 minutes at 425 degrees if baked alone.

Mrs. H. T. Seymour,
1416 S. Quincy Street,
Arlington, Va.

Economy With Imagination

The pot roast isn't a pretentious or high-hat dish, but when dramatized with flaky rice that has been lifted to greater heights with apricots for flavor and color, it deserves the blue ribbon award as won by Mrs. Mary E. Ott, this month's first-prize winner in The Post recipe contest. The theme was Thrift Dinners

Recipe Contest

THEME—Menu with a cheese dish included. The cheese dish may be a main dish, dessert, bread and such other dishes as cheese is the predominant foodstuff. Menu and recipe must be given.

QUALIFICATION—Recipe must not be taken from service cookbooks. All recipes must be kitchen-tested, practical, carefully written, exact and level measurements and number of servings given. Only one entry may be submitted by a person. All entries must be signed in longhand (they will be disqualified if name is typewritten.)

PRIZE—First, $10; second, $5; third, $3; ten $1 prizes.

CLOSING DATE—Noon, Saturday, February 20.

LEARN THE Thriftier CUTS OF MEAT

THE B Vitamins of Pork

at thrifty prices in these delicious cuts

PORK SPARERIBS (Above). Can be braised, barbecued, or cooked in water with sauerkraut or cabbage. For variety, spread an apple stuffing between two sections of ribs before roasting. Allow about half a pound of spareribs per person.

PORK HOCKS (Right). Meaty tidbits great favorites with men, and frequently served in restaurants—usually with potatoes and cabbage. An easy dish to prepare at home. Simply cook at simmering temperature 1½ or 2 hrs. Add the potatoes about 45 min. before the hocks are done, and the cabbage wedges about 15 min. before meat is done.

Send for new 48-page purse-size handbook of thriftier cuts of meat—what to ask for, how to prepare them. A buying and cooking guide to more than 80 thrifty cuts. Just send 5 cents in coin to Dept. W, AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE, Chicago.

LEAN PORK IS A RICH NATURAL SOURCE OF B VITAMINS

Like all meat, pork brings you B vitamins, important minerals (iron, copper, phosphorus) and is rich in complete, high quality proteins. It is 96 to 98 per cent digestible.

U. S. Says Army of 7 Millions Will Carry War to Enemy Home

"Report to the Nation" was the story of the effort of the American people to arm themselves and to supply their friends in the 18 months between the fall of France and the Axis attack upon the United States.

Although not designed for that purpose, the report was regarded in Administration circles as an effective answer to the report of the Truman Committee, which last week vehemently criticized many phases of the war effort.

Director MacLeish offered no criticism in his report beyond admitting that there had been "delays and omissions and mistakes." These, he said, occurred in the realization of "all human efforts of comparable magniture," and he added that they have had and will continue to have critical attention in "appropriate quarters."

He said the report was in no sense an "investigation" of the defense effort. Neither was it an attempt, he said, to "interpret or evaluate the defense effort." The intention was, he said, to present the record, in "over-all factual terms," of what had been done between the time when the United States became the arsenal of democracy until the Axis attack made it an army of democracy.

In some places the "Report to the Nation" handled production in a manner that angered Capitol Hill critics last summer. For example, it said:

"Production of guns of all types has increased nearly five times, while production of ammunition is nine times that of a year ago . . ."

Details Withheld

Senators and Representatives sharply criticized the now defunct OPM many months ago for making statements like that without telling what production was a year ago. A production five times greater or nine times greater than a year ago, they contended, meant nothing to the average citizen unless he knew what the basis of comparison was—what quantities of guns and ammunition had been produced 12 months ago.

MacLeish said at the outset, however, that certainly the American people will understand the present necessity for restriction upon the publication of statistics.

There was not much in the "Report to the Nation" that will enlighten Americans as to what is available in the way of men and material to head off Japan in the Far East. Generally speaking, it told of what will be available in days to come.

"Foundations Laid"

Director MacLeish said frankly that his report told the story of the "foundations we have laid" for a total war effort.

"They are good strong foundations," he said. "But they are foundations only. . . ."

Fifty thousand copies of Report to the Nation already have been printed. They have been sent out to newspapers, members of Congress, libraries and other groups, and are being distributed to citizens at the Office of Facts and Figures in the Library of Congress Annex. More copies will be printed if there is a demand.

Director MacLeish told in Chapter 1 of Americans fighting on the Atlantic, on the Pacific, and on Wake Island, Guam, Midway and the Philippines.

"There have been defeats," he said. "But this much our small forces on our island outposts have demonstrated: We have an Army and a Navy that can fight."

Total victory is America's objective, he said, and adds:

"We must attain an overwhelming superiority," he went on. "We must take the offensive on a front that extends around the world. We must liberate Guam, Wake, and Manila. We must carry the war to the enemy's home ground and hit him again and again wherever we can reach him."

He referred to the building of our two-ocean Navy as "the most crucial of all our necessities."

"When Japan struck," the report continued, "we had 17 battleships, and 15 more being built. We had seven aircraft carriers, and 11 more being built. We had 37 cruisers, and 54 more being built. We had 171 destroyers, with 193 more being built. We had 113 submarines, and 73 more being built."

The term "being built" presumably includes vessels for which materials are being fabricated, but which are not yet actually on the ways.

Naval Construction Covered

The Navy in 1941 commissioned 25 new combat ships, the report said, and added 2000 planes to those in its hangars and on its aircraft carriers. It also enrolled 5000 new officers and more than 12 times as many men.

In the course of the year, the report said, 345 combat ships of many kinds were under construction, as well as 96 auxiliary vessels, 243 mine craft and 225 patrol boats. It continued:

"The Navy's task today is twofold—it has the greatest battle of its life on its hands, and it also has a tremendous defensive patrolling job to carry out.

"The Navy, like the rest of us, is at war with Germany in the Atlantic, with Japan in the Pacific, with Italy in the Mediterranean. At the same time, it must police with Britain the sea lanes from Iceland to the bulge of South America, and, with the British, Dutch and Australian navies, the vast Pacific as far as Singapore.

"Problem Without Parallel"

"Fighting ships which might otherwise be used to attack the Japanese navy must serve as two great mobile arcs of steel guarding all our continental coastline. They must see that German ships do not menace the routes to and from the eastern ports of South and Central America. They must keep Japanese ships clear of the Western Hemisphere from the Straits of Magellan to the Northern Bering Sea. This is a naval problem without parallel in history."

The report declared that the Army has come an astoundingly long way since 18 months ago. It told of the rush of voluntary enlistments after Pearl Harbor and of the amendments made to the Selective Service Act, and added:

"With the new law, the United States will be able to recruit an Army estimated at seven million men. . . . Yesterday comparatively few American families were represented in the Army. Tomorrow there will be comparatively few that are not. . . ."

"The two most important weapons in this war are the plane and the tank," the report asserted." In these weapons we are already on our way to outbuilding the world.

"We already are producing light and medium tanks in quantities and the first heavy tank was delivered to the Army the day we declared war on Japan. . . .

"Army warplane production has been stepped up to the point where, with Great Britain, we soon will exceed the plane output of the Axis countries. More important, we will have the plant capacity to increase our production to the point where we can seize control of the air in all areas of the world struggle.

"In performance, our Army Air Corps can be credited with spectacular progress. We now have four types of combat planes better than anything yet produced abroad, so far as is known. Details on air speeds cannot be given because, with the declaration of war, these became military secrets. . . .

"American bomber types now in mass production are superior to those being built anywhere else in the world. Still better models are on the way."

Discussing the Lend-Lease Act, MacLeish said that actual exports sent abroad thus far "hardly exceed 600 million dollars." Aid to China and Russia, he said, had been far from enough, and he disclosed that among the things to go to Russia were "large quantities of oil and gasoline."

"The stream must become a river, a torrent, and then a flood," MacLeish said, referring to lend-lease aid. "Training British pilots, guarding the health of those who labor on the Burma Road, reparing war and merchant vessels—all must continue and be augmented. Planes, tanks, guns, ammunition, and food must flow in even greater quantities to Russia, the Dutch East Indies, Australia, Burma, China, Africa, the Middle East, the British Isles, and South America."

Food for Our Friends

Under the heading of "The Battle of Economics," the report declared that America's goal is "starvation for our enemies and food for our friends." It continued:

"The term 'economic warfare,' with all its exciting, if vague, connotations, has become familiar to the average citizen in recent months. Just what does it mean? It means fighting the Messerschmitt before it is a Messerschmitt, fighting the tank before it is a tank, smashing the submarine before it can go to sea. It means preventing the manufacture of Axis weapons of war by preventing the Axis from getting raw materials. It means getting raw materials for our own production."

It told how this is being done by freezing foreign assets, by blacklisting Axis firms in Central and South America, and by taking over the exportable surplus of countries like Brazil, Mexico and Peru which otherwise might be sold to enemy agents.

Under the heading of "The Labor Front," the report commented:

"We are fighting our battle of production confident that free labor will outproduce slave labor.

"Five million workers have already been drawn into America's tremendous war production program, but that is only a beginning. Five million more will be required in the next six months. By the end of the year labor's army of men and women in war industries will be tripled—and it will be quadrupled in 1943."

Reference to Strikes

The report said that 280,100 workmen were involved in defense strikes from June 1, 1940, to December 1, 1941, but pointed out that the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor changed everything on the labor front.

The report foresaw a sharp increase in the number of women engaged in war work, stating:

"During the last war, nearly one-fourth of all the employes in aircraft plants were women. Before this war ends, one-third of our aircraft workers may be women . . .

"It is estimated more than 500,000 women now are employed in war work. But today only 4 women in every 1000 are working in war industries, while in 1918 there were 21 such workers in every 1000."

The report sounded a warning against inflation.

"Inflation ravages a population as effectively as bombing from the air," it asserted. "More than 45 per cent of the total cost to the United States of World War I resulted from inflation. Should prices continue their present upward swing, they will add to the war program more than the total cost of the first World War . . .

"Inflationary signs are everywhere apparent . . . The cost of living is surging upward at the rate of 1½ per cent a month, and, should it continue, will have risen 15 per cent by March, 1942. . . .

"Not only must inflation be prevented so that profiteering is prevented and the burdens of war are distributed equitably, it must be prevented also to avoid social and economic prostration after the war. The higher prices are allowed to rise now, the farther they must fall after the war . . ."

Report to the Nation happily pointed out that, in one respect, the United States will be unique among the warring nations. There will be no shortage of food. Americans are not likely to have to carry ration cards.

Cosmopolitan Club Cites Miss Boardman

CLUB PRESIDENT PRESENTS AWARD TO RED CROSS SECRETARY—Miss Mabel T. Boardman, secretary of the American Red Cross, receives the Cosmopolitan Club's distinguished service award from Herbert Woods (left), club president, and Dr. J. Rozier Biggs, chairman of the medal committee. Miss Boardman is the second woman to be so honored in the history of the club. The award, made in recognition of Miss Boardman's Red Cross achievements, was presented at an honor luncheon in the Mayflower Hotel

The Cosmopolitan Club Distinguished Service Medal for 1941 was presented yesterday to Miss Mabel T. Boardman in recognition of her Red Cross achievements, both nationally and locally.

Three hundred civic, professional and welfare leaders witnessed the decoration of the second woman to be so honored by the club. The other was Miss Mary V. Merrick, president of the Christ Child Society.

Herbert Woods, Cosmopolitan president, presided over the honor luncheon, held at the Hotel Mayflower. Presentation of the medal was made by Dr. J. Rozier Biggs, chairman of the medal committee and who originated the idea when he was club president 12 years ago.

Clad in her official uniform, the beloved secretary of the American Red Cross—she also is vice chairman of the District chapter—squirmed just a little in her chair as Dr. Biggs described her as "true, heart and soul, to her Red Cross obligations; ever ready to give all she can to the duties of the organization she has served for nearly 40 years."

"Yes, Miss Boardman has truly been a friend to all humanity," said Dr. Biggs.

"Wherever the cry of humanity in distress is raised, at home or abroad, Miss Boardman will be found working for the alleviation of that distress."

In response, Miss Boardman said she shines but by reflected glory, calling attention to Washington's 10,000 women volunteers and the "tens of thousands of others, men, women, boys and girls, who are preparing themselves by Red Cross courses in first aid and home nursing for assistance to their fellowmen in case of need."

"Some 35 years ago," she continued, "a little chapter was organized one day in my home. A score of men and women launched it, with high hopes and eager vision. How splendidly have these been fulfilled. Our chapter has just enrolled in the District 190,345 senior members and through its schools 88,000 more of the juniors, in this vast Red Cross army of 28 million that blanket our country."

She urged that in this war we "fight as crusaders, warriors of the Cross, with malice toward none, with hatred for the crime of slavery but not with hatred for the slaves."

The following medalists of other years attended the ceremony: E. C. Graham, Robert V. Fleming, Thomas P. Littlepage, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, Coleman Jennings and James E. Colliflower. Absent were Theodore W. Noyes, Eugene Meyer and Miss Mary V. Merrick. Martin A. Leese, first recipient of the Distinguished Service Medal, is deceased.

The program was broadcast by Station MWAL.

Army to Form Infantry Unit, New Air Group for Negroes

Plans for the organization of an infantry division made up of Negro officers and enlisted men and another air unit composed of Negroes were disclosed yesterday by Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War, at his press conference.

Stimson said the division, which will be known as the Ninety-third, will be composed of colored regiments now in service and additional men drawn from various replacement training centers, and will probably be activated in May. It will be stationed at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

The air unit, the 100th Pursuit Squadron, will be the Army's second all-Negro squadron. The first, the Ninety-ninth Pursuit Squadron, has been in training since September at Tuskegee, Ala. After they have completed their training, the cadets of the Ninety-ninth Squadron will be commissioned as second lieutenants, and assigned as instructors to other Negro groups awaiting training.

In speaking of the service of Negroes in the Army, Stimson recalled that the main parade ground at Fort Knox, Ky., was named Brooks Field, in honor of a Negro soldier, Private Robert H. Brooks, who was the first casualty of the armored force in the Philippines.

Negroes are being sent to the various officer candidate schools where enlisted men who have shown outstanding qualities of leadership are trained for commission as second lieutenants.

Four regiments, the 148th Field Artillery, the 372d Infantry, the 366th Infantry, and the 369th Coast Artillery, are completely officered by Negroes from lieutenant to colonel.

Next D. C. Group To Enter Army Will Get Publicity

The next group of Washington men to enter the armed forces will be inducted February 17, Col. Walter S. Welsh of the Selective Service announced yesterday.

Unlike their predecessors of January 5, 6 and 7, who left civilian life completely unheralded, the coming group will at least have the pleasure of reading their names in the newspapers.

In a memorandum to all State directors dated January 10, Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service, countermanded a previous order restricting the publication of names and numbers of inductees.

Under the new order, order numbers will be still withheld but the names may be released. The order, signed by Hershey, says, "Newspapers may be furnished the names of registrants about to be inducted and newspapers may publish the photographs of such registrants."

Alfred A. Bacon's Funeral Tomorrow

Funeral services for Alfred A. Bacon, 68, Spanish-American War veteran and janitor at the Scottish Rite Hall for 20 years, will be at 10:30 a. m. tomorrow at the W. Ernest Jarvis funeral home. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

Three lodges, of which Mr. Bacon, who died Tuesday, was a member, will hold services at his home at 8 p. m. today, at 124 D Street Northwest.

Senate Votes to Allow City-Run Parking Lots

By unanimous consent the Senate yesterday passed the off-street parking bill, permitting the Commissioners to set up municipally operated parking lots on the fringe of the downtown area to help alleviate Washington's traffic problem.

Senator Burton (Republican), of Ohio, whose District subcommittee conducted hearings on the measure for three weeks, pointed out the need of remedial measures.

The bill still awaits action by the House District Committee after the traffic subcommittee headed by Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, urged a complete revamping of the District transportation problem, to place greater emphasis on the construction of subways than on the creation of off-street parking lots.

The Senate also passed a bill amending the District Revenue Act, principally rewriting the District law to conform with exemption provisions in the Federal income tax laws.

The bill eliminates the need of an affidavit on matters contained in individual tax returns and extends the penalty provision to include the filing of false returns.

A $25 filing fee requirement for corporations is eliminated and a $10 annual license fee is substituted. Applications for licenses must be made 60 days after the bill is enacted.

Also passed by unanimous consent yesterday was a bill authorizing the purchase of approximately 25 acres of land adjacent to Arlington National Cemetery. The new land would be incorporated into cemetery use.

Capital Whirl

by Hope Ridings Miller

Every day gives rise to a new report that still another European government-in-exile is laying plans to move to Washington sometime soon . . . Latest to be mentioned in that category is Luxembourg, which now has its headquarters in London . . . But the Minister of Luxembourg, Hugues Le Gallais, stamps such reports as grossly premature and feels they are too far-fetched to merit a formal denial.

MINISTER LE GALLAIS

Incidentally, today marks the birthday of the Grand Duchess Charlotte of Luxembourg, who with the Prince Consort, is now in England . . . Reports that the Luxembourg seat of government-in-exile might be moving from London, probably stem from the grand duchess' plans to return to Canada sometime soon . . . Shortly after she and the prince consort rejoin their children in Canada, they probably will come to the Capital for another visit . . . But the government itself? "No," says Minister Le Gallais. "We have heard nothing about it."

Envoy and Wife at New Address

Nobody would ever have thought it could happen here . . . but it has. A popular envoy and his wife (the Minister of Yugoslavia and Mme. Fotitch) moved from their former home on Sixteenth Street to 2221 R Street several weeks ago, "and it hasn't been in the papers a single time," said Mme. Fotitch when I saw her at the Brazilian Embassy Wednesday night.

MME. FOTITCH

"I never thought that could happen here," she caroled, adding that reporters around Washington rarely miss the least nugget of news . . . Well, anyway, since the staff of the legation is growing and the volume of official business is increasing, the Minister and Mme. Fotitch decided to move their residence out of the building that has served in the dual capacity of home and chancery for some time . . . So, for almost a month, they have been established in the house once owned by the former Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Francis Adams; later purchased by the McCormack-Goodhearts, who leased it last year to the Patrick Hurleys . . . It's a twin house to the one next door owned by the former Chief Justice and Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes.

Close friends of Representative Katharine Byron say "there's positively nothing to the rumor" that she is to marry the scion of a widely known Virginia family, as reported in this column yesterday. Same friends say further that although she has been seen frequently in the company of the young man I mentioned, she also goes about with a number of others . . . and that the one who really has the inside track to her heart at present is a doctor 'way down South whose first name begins with "M."

Of course, it's only natural that a pretty woman in politics would have her name linked romantically with just about everybody who knocks at her door . . . A few months ago, Senator Styles Bridges was among those mentioned as paying special court to her . . . Since then a prominent Washingtonian and an equally well-known out-of-towner have been very much in the picture . . . Which is what you would expect when the lady is as attractive as Maryland's first woman Representative.

It's All for Charity . . .

"Not quantity, but quality is what our rummage sale will feature," said Mrs. George Barnett with a laugh when I talked to her yesterday about the latest welfare venture to which she is devoting her time and talent . . . As head of the committee for the relief of war refugees in England, she is very much interested in the sale that opens this morning at 10 o'clock at 1218 Connecticut Avenue.

MRS. GEORGE BARNETT

"We'd like to see some of our prospective customers bearing gifts when they arrive," Mrs. Barnett went on, after she had mentioned that some additional items were needed for the outlay . . . But already in stock and marked for sale are some handsome Arabic wall hangings; a variety of bric-a-brac and china; some clothing, several dozen men's shirts and—well, why not go down and see for yourself? . . . Mrs. Carlton Holdrege is chairman of the sale committee, and she has a lively group working with her . . . The organization as a whole was first founded in England by the Countess of Abingdon, who has been looking after war refugees in all countries . . . Anderson House has been the headquarters of the Washington group, but the latter is now looking for a new "home," since the former one is being taken over by the Navy.

Some of the guests sang for their supper—a $7.50 supper incidentally—when the Metropolitan Club had one of its gala stag dinners last night . . . Special guests were officers of the Gridiron Club, and a few of the more talented members, who were asked point-blank to give an exhibition of the art that had contributed toward making their organization "the outstanding dining club of the world."

GEORGE A. GARRETT

In charge of the entertainment, which was entitled "A Night of Song," was George A. Garrett, president of the Metropolitan Club. Members paid $5 each for their dinner, and $7.50 each for guests. Cocktails began making the rounds at 7:30 o'clock . . . half an hour later dinner was served . . . and a couple of hours after that, the Gridiron stars were shining forth with some of the songs they had prepared for their annual winter dinner . . . which went off the boards, on short notice after Pearl Harbor.

Dinners on the dotted line: The Peruvian Ambassador, Don Manuel Freyre y Santander, will be host on February 7 . . . Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins has invitations out for Tuesday, February 3, and Mrs. Cary Langhorne will entertain at the 1925 F Street Club on Wednesday, February 4 . . . Princess Bomcompagni will have guests dining with her on Tuesday, January 28, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Keating will be hosts at a similar party on Saturday, January 31, their party to take place at the Sulgrave Club.

More cuff-notes for the calendar: Merritt Swift will gather in a number of friends for luncheon today, and George Williams will be a dinner host this evening . . . Mr. and Mrs. Keith Merrill have cards out for cocktails on Sunday, February 1 . . . and the annual big-league Republican dinner that always goes on the calendar sometime around Lincoln's Birthday will take place this year on the evening of Wednesday, February 11, at the Mayflower Hotel.

Peppers Give Luncheon for Mrs. Martin

"If you get homesick for Florida, just drop up and have a look at my mounted rattlesnake," Florida Senator Claude Pepper invited Mrs. John D. Martin, visiting daughter of Senator and Mrs. James Hughes, at the luncheon which Mrs. Pepper gave in her honor in the Senate restaurant yesterday.

Senator Pepper, the only man at the informal luncheon gathering, will leave tonight for Jacksonville, Fla., to make a speech and will return the first of next week.

Mrs. Martin, who recently returned from a sojourn in New York, has been widely feted during her several weeks visit in the Capital with her parents. Before she leaves Wednesday to rejoin her doctor-husband in Miami, she will be honored at a number of parties. Today, she will be guest of honor at a luncheon at the Mayflower at which Mrs. Moran Drury will be hostess and tonight she and her parents will be the guests of Maj. and Mrs. McKenzie Davison at a small dinner at the Army-Navy Club. Tomorrow night, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wyatt will entertain at a buffet supper in her honor in their home on Kalmia Road; Monday afternoon Mrs. Robert LeBaron will be hostess at a cocktail fete for the Florida visitor and that night Dr. and Mrs. Leo Brison Norris will entertain at a bridge party.

Among the guests at yesterday's luncheon was Mme. Loudon, wife of the Netherlands Minister, who compared notes with her hostess on her small daughter and Mrs. Pepper's young nephew. Mrs. Frank Wideman discussed Florida with Mrs. Hall Downes, and Mrs. Robert LeBaron, Mrs. Kay Brenneman and Miss Betty Hynes were also present.

Many to Have Jubilee Guests

A number of Capital hostesses will entertain tomorrow at Hotel 2400, at the President's diamond jubilee luncheon.

The former Chinese Ambassador to the United States, Dr. Sao-ke Alfred Sze, and Mme. Sze will have as their guests Rear Admiral and Mrs. Harry P. Huse, Mrs. Mary E. Stewart, Mrs. Perry Heath, Mrs. Emerson Howe and Mrs. William Fitch Kelly.

Mrs. E. Eugene Cox, wife of the Georgia representative, will entertain the Georgia delegates' wives. Among her guests will be Mrs. Walter George, Mrs. Robert Ramspeck, Mrs. Malcolm Tarver, Mrs. Hugh Peterson, Mrs. Stephen Pace and Mrs. Paul Brown.

In another luncheon group will be Mrs. Jesse Jones, wife of the Secretary of Commerce; Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, wife of the Supreme Court Justice; Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, chairman of the board of the birthday ball dinner committee, and Andrew Kelly, executive director of entertainment for the President's diamond jubilee ball.

Luncheon-Shower Given to Honor Mary Jane Stanley

At another in the succession of parties in her honor before her marriage to Cary Euwer February 7, Miss Mary Jane Stanley was feted at a luncheon-shower yesterday by Mrs. James G. Boss 3d, in her home in Laurel, Md.

Miss Stanley, who until recently has been living in Laurel with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Stanley, at their former home, The Lawn, has been the object of many parties in Prince Georges County since the announcement of her engagement last fall. Yesterday a number of her Maryland friends were on hand as well as a smaller number from the Capital.

Seated around the table, which was centered with a miniature bride and bridegroom and white candles on a reflecting mirror, were Mrs. William Stanley, mother of the bride-elect; Mrs. Walter Euwer, mother of the prospective bridegroom; Mrs. Elizabeth H. Boss, Mrs. John S. Stanley, Mrs. D. C. McLaughlin, Mrs. C. E. Little, Miss Betty Mills, Mrs. Rogers Israel, Mrs. William Sturgis, Mrs. Stanley Hinrichs, Mrs. C. E. Welling, Mrs. Raymond Kotrla, Mrs. Robert S. McCeney, Mrs. David Bryon, Miss Florence Fisher, Mrs. Ernest Cory and Mrs. Kent R. Mullikan.

Defense Bond Dance Scheduled Tonight

For the purchase of United States Defense Bonds, the first annual Georgetown Medical Ball will be held tonight in the Grand Ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel.

Music at the 9 to 1 party will be furnished by Mal Hallet and his Boston Tea Party. Patrons for the event include many of the Capital's outstanding doctors.

Mary Ellen Drury Becomes Bride of Mr. Aughinbaugh

The wedding of Miss Mary Ellen Drury and Charles Aughinbaugh took place yesterday morning at 10 o'clock in the Holy Comforter Church with the Rev. Edwin Luckett officiating. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Drury, of this city. Mr. Aughinbaugh is the son of Mrs. Margaret Aughinbaugh, of this city, and William H. Aughinbaugh, of Arlington, Va.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a blue crepe street length frock and brown accessories. Her corsage was a cluster of brown orchids. She was attended by her sister, Miss Thelma Cecelia Drury, who wore a dusty pink outfit and a corsage of orchids. Charles Campbell served as best man. A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents and Mrs. Drury received with the young couple wearing a teal blue dress.

Following their wedding trip to Florida, the couple will live at 90 Webster Street Northwest. Among those who came from Clements, Md., to attend the wedding were the bride's two grandmothers, Mrs. R. I. Bowles and Mrs. Lucy Drury. Mrs. Clarence Latham, also of Clements, and Mrs. Bernard Bowles, jr., of Loveville, Md., also attended.

Maryland Couple's Betrothal Announced

Mr. and Mrs. I. A. Smith, of Ashton, Md., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss F. Elizabeth Smith, to Joseph E. Fisher, of Rockville, Md.

Mr. Fisher is stationed at Fort Riley, Kans., and no date has, as yet, been set for the wedding.

Maria Guarin Is Wedded to Philip Powell

With orchids—flown up from Colombia—for her bridal bouquet, Senorita Maria Vanegas Guarin became the bride of Philip Powell last evening at 7:30 o'clock in the rectory of St. Paul's Church. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Maria Vanegas, of Bogota, Colombia, and is employed as a secretary at the Colombian Embassy here. Mr. Powell is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Powell, who came here from Santa Paula, Calif., to attend the wedding. He is with the division of Cultural relations of the State Department.

The bride was given in marriage by the First Secretary of the Argentine Embassy, Don Adolfo Scilingo, who formerly served as charge d'affaires at the Argentine legation in Colombia, where he knew the bride. The bride wore a traditional white gown and long tulle veil, and her bouquet was of white orchids. Senora de Vargas, wife of the First Secretary of the Colombian Embassy, served as matron of honor. Dr. John C. Patterson was best man.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Holland. After their wedding trip the couple will make their home at the Chastleton.

The bridegroom attended the University of California, where he received his Ph. D. in Latin-American studies. He is a member of Phi Gamma Delta and Phi Beta Kappa.

Miami Season In Full Swing

Resort society in Miami Beach goes on apace as the Florida colony goes into the height of its winter season. Defense and war relief work are intermingled with sun and sports and entertainment to make for "life as usual" in the Southern State.

Among the Washingtonians who are spending the season there, are Miss Betty Willis, who will be among those modeling uniforms of the Civilian Defense, Red Cross and American Women's Volunteer organizations Thursday night at the first in a series of informal parties at the Surf Club, Mrs. Boyd de Brossard, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Holmes and Mr. and Mrs. James Rotto.

Here and there around Miami Beach: Mr. and Mrs. Carl Joerissen and their daughter, Miss Kay Joerissen, accompanied by their house guest, Mrs. Lawson H. Sanderson, of Quantico, Va., formed a luncheon group at Hialeah Park, later viewing the races from the upper clubhouse. . . . Col. and Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim were honor guests at a cocktail party given by Mr. and Mrs. Howell Sayre, of Brooklyn, in their new home on DiLido Island. . . . The Sayres were guests of the Guggenheims aboard their yacht, Firenze, on a cruise to Central America last season. . . . Mr. and Mrs. Grant LeRoux—Mrs. LeRoux is the daughter of Lawrence Wood Robert—were guests at a buffet supper and cocktail party given by Lieut. and Mrs. Harry Waln Harrison, jr., of Philadelphia, at their home.

Mrs. Dorothy Lee Ward has returned to her Allison Island home for the season. Mrs. Ward's niece, Miss Eula May Grigg, who spent part of last season in Miami, is now attending Brenau College in Gainesville, Ga. She will spend her spring vacation with Mrs. Ward, and Mrs. John Ward Stanley, another niece, will arrive later in the season for a visit with Mrs. Ward, accompanied by her mother-in-law, Mrs. Boyd Stanley.

Miss Brooks to Wed Lieut. Campbell

Fort Knox, Ky., Jan. 22.—Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Edward Hale Brooks, of Fort Knox, announce the engagement of their daughter, Elizabeth Allen Brooks, to Lieut. Raymond Potter Campbell, jr., son of Col. and Mrs. Raymond Potter Campbell, of Llewellyn Park, West Orange, N. J.

The bride-elect was graduated from Arlington Hall Junior College in 1939. Lieut. Campbell finished at Phillips Exeter Academy in 1936 and was graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1941. The wedding will take place February 14, in the post chapel at Fort Knox.

Many Prenuptial Parties Planned For Miss Nancy Williard

Miss Nancy Williard, whose marriage to Thomas Henry Schaffert will be a February highlight, is the center of an ever increasing whirl of pre-nuptial parties.

Miss Dorothy Selby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Selby, will fete Miss Williard at a luncheon and linen shower at Normandy Farms tomorrow; on Tuesday Mrs. J. J. Hasley will entertain at dinner; Miss Shirley Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Wilson, will be hostess on January 28, and on Friday, January 30, Miss Barbara Richards, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julian Richards, will give an evening party and kitchen shower combined.

Mrs. Watson Shelton will be luncheon hostess for Miss Williard on Saturday, January 31, at the Shoreham, and the following day finds two parties on the schedule, the luncheon to be given by Mrs. Allison Chapin at her home in Rockville, and the buffet supper that evening at which Miss Virginia Steuart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Steuart, will be hostess.

Miss Martha Shelton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Watson Shelton, will entertain at a personal shower and evening party on Monday, February 2, and the following day Mrs. Dorothy Phillips, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas L. Phillips, will give a lingerie shower for the bride-to-be. That same evening William W. Adams will entertain at a stag party for the bridegroom.

On Wednesday, February 4, the couple will be feted at a dinner party at the Army-Navy Country Club at which Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schaffert, parents of the bridegroom, will be hosts, and the following evening, Mrs. Frederick Ramsey, wife of Col. Ramsey and mother of the bride-to-be, will entertain at an evening trousseau tea for the feminine members of the wedding party and old friends of the family, while the bridegroom-to-be is giving his bachelor dinner.

Mrs. W. W. Orr, wife of Col. Orr, of the Marine Corps, who is a sister of Mrs. Ramsey and scheduled to be the matron of honor at the wedding, will entertain at the "rehearsal dinner" following the wedding rehearsal. The dinner will be given at the Army-Navy Town Club.

Miss Williard has completed the list of attendants for her marriage, which will take place on Saturday, February 7, at St. Alban's Church, at 6:30 o'clock in the evening with the Rev. Charles T. Warner officiating.

Mrs. Orr will be matron of honor and there will be two maids of honor, Miss Virginia Steuart and Miss Frances Bowie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Addison Bowie. Bridesmaids will be Miss Martha Shelton, Miss Ardath Brown, Miss Dorothy Phillips and Miss Barbara Richards.

Mr. Schaffert will have as best man his brother, Leonard Schaffert, and ushers will be William W. Adams, jr., Harold Vincent, William Smith, Raymond Coe and Jerard Paquin. Mr. and Mrs. Coe and Mr. and Mrs. Paquin entertained in honor of the couple at the Coe residence at a dinner party last Saturday evening.

Jeanne Roland Is Honored at Informal Supper

An informal spaghetti supper last night marked off another in the many prenuptial parties being given for Miss Jeanne Roland before her marriage to Edward Linwood Turner January 31. Mrs. Thurston H. Baxter, wife of Maj. Baxter, and Mrs. Lloyd H. Watnee, wife of Maj. Watnee, were co-hostesses at the former's home on Thirtieth Place.

The bride-elect chose an evening-length gown of hunter's green for the occasion. She wore bronze accessories with it, and on her shoulder was a pale green orchid. Among the 18 guests present was her mother, Mrs. Wallace Gordon Smith, wife of Lieut. Col. Smith.

Others there were Mrs. Arthur Ennis, Mrs. Evers Abbey, Miss Helen Goetz, Miss Clifford Bradley, Mrs. Earl Hoag, Miss Laurene Bradley, Mrs. A. L. Marriner and her mother, Mrs. Hull; Mrs. Robert Winsatt, Mrs. H. C. Chenault, Mrs. Draper P. Henry, Miss June Hallinan, Mrs. Leonard Rodieck, and Mrs. Edward Hildreth.

Today Mrs. Abbey and Mrs. Wimsatt plan to fete the bride-to-be at a party at Mrs. Abbey's apartment at the Broadmoor. Mrs. Smith, the bride's mother, has sent out invitations for the rehearsal dinner which read like something that might have been tacked on some theater bulletin board—to this effect:

Notice. The final rehearsal of "Mr. Turner Takes a Wife" or "Jeanne Makes Good" will be held at Bolling Field at 7 o'clock Thursday evening, January 29."

Signed by the "Producer," Mrs. Smith, it goes on to notify the receivers of a dinner preceding the rehearsal at the Officers Club at 5:30 o'clock given by the "backer of the production"—Col. Smith, of course.

Mrs. Kahle Here To Visit Parents

Mrs. John F. Kahle, daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. George R. Clark, has arrived in Washington for an indefinite visit with her parents, at their apartment at the Shoreham.

Mrs. Kahle, the former Miss Louise Clark, is actively engaged in war relief activities both Red Cross and canteen work.

Properly Fed Workers Mean Peak Production

Low-Cost Cafeterias Needed for Workers In Defense

By Ida Jean Kain

ERNEST BEVAN, England's minister of labor, has made the statement that if the workers could have better nutrition—particularly more meat—their production would be speeded up 15 per cent.

Nutrition has come to the attention of the English government because it is a problem to get food. The attention of this country has not yet been focused on food as a power in production.

Even though food is plentiful, there is a great lack of proper facilities for feeding our factory workers. It is alarming to find that in some of the newest defense plants there are no cafeterias. In some instances the only nearby places selling food are hamburger and soft drink stands. Our defense workers cannot keep going in high gear on such fare.

The Factory Front

Since this is a war of production, the man behind the machine is indispensable. Employers have come to recognize the value of accident insurance, proper lighting, and comfortable working conditions. If they have lagged on nutrition, it is no doubt because the country as a whole has been slow to appreciate its power. We have always been inclined to put food last.

As a Nation we have directed all our energies toward perfecting machines and improving the fuel and materials that go into them. But, as pointed out by a nationally circulated magazine in an article entitled, "Food Is Power," we have been curiously unconcerned with the human being who operates the machines.

If our production is to reach and maintain top capacity, our factory workers must be able to get the food that makes for health and efficiency. The major part of this responsibility rests on the homemaker who prepares two-thirds of the meals. But that other one-third either adds to or subtracts from the worker's efficiency and it is not to be discounted.

Employers Aid

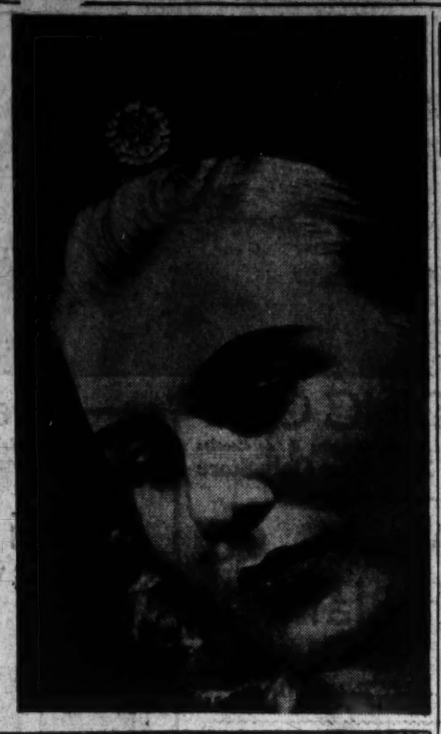
Some of the more farsighted employers have established good, low-cost cafeterias with nutritionists in charge to plan balanced meals and to supervise their preparation. The cooking of food is just as important as the planning. Unless it is properly cooked, the essential vitamins and minerals are lost.

If an analysis of factory production were made, food would loom as a primary factor in human efficiency. On the basis of other surveys there is not the slightest question that workers who get the right kind of food average a much higher output than those who are forced to forage for their noon meals.

Wear His Insignia at the Proper Angle, And Also at the Right Time and Place

LEFT—This girl's sweetheart is a naval aviator, so cap emblem is worn on the side closest her heart. Her brother is in the Army, so officer's badge goes right

RIGHT—The maple leaf sister pin of the Royal Canadian Engineers is worn correctly on the beret brim. The pin may decorate a sweetheart, wife, mother or international cousin



Wives, Mothers and Sisters May Get Own Emblems; Man Buys for His Sweetheart

IF YOU'RE going to wear his insignia, wear it correctly. Many a girl is wearing her hero's air-arms in gold and diamonds, pinned at a piquant angle on her cap—just where she shouldn't wear them. Aviation wings are part of the official insignia of the Air Corps and should be worn straight, pinned on the left breast of the dress or jacket. This is the same position in which the flying boy friend wears his wings on his uniform.

Uncle Sam is lenient about letting jewelry designers copy cap badges, collar insignia and sleeve emblems. Many beautiful brooches in two-tone gold, with diamonds and colored stones are now appearing in jewelry stores.

Wives, mothers and sisters may buy remembrance pins if their heroes are away from home on duty. The man himself buys the symbol to be worn by his sweetheart, especially since some of these pins are valued as much as an engagement ring. The jeweled service emblem is often considered to be a wartime version of the fraternity pin.

Day or Evening

The younger girl—sister or sweetheart—usually wears a gold or platinum emblem set with small brilliants. Rubies and sapphires may be added to form the red, white and blue. A mature woman—wife or mother—may wear a handsome cap badge or air wings set solid in diamonds. Some of the air arms are 5 inches from tip to tip and form an impressive bar-pin for the left breast.

All these insignia may be worn day or evening, and the simpler pieces are permissible with women's uniforms other than heavy denim work clothes.

The officer's cap emblem is the favorite for wear as a brooch, since its general shape is round. Jeweled copies may be worn on a plain hat, such as a beret, or on the lapel or pocket of a jacket. Service insignia should never be required to do such "work" as draping up veiling or holding a blouse together!

Every officer in the Army wears the block letters "U. S." on the collar of his coat or on the right side of his shirt collar. These significant initials are now copied in slim baguette diamonds to wear in the buttonhole of a suit. If color is desired, the letters "U. S. A." may be had in rubies, diamonds, and sapphires; one letter in each stone mounted on a button.

Identity Bracelet

The newest charm-holder is an identity bracelet fastened with a little plaque to be engraved with the owner's name and address. In the links of this bracelet may be fastened charms symbolizing the duties of boys in many different branches of service. Most of these symbols already exist in charms, twinkling with small stones. As they are not in any way official, there is no question of taste involved in their use.

For a nautical, Navy bracelet, you might choose the following charms, and then look around for men in corresponding branches of the service (that should keep you romantically occupied for the duration): A diamond star for a line officer, an anchor for a boatswain, a spyglass for a gunner's mate, a disc for an electrician, an open book for a ship's printer, a crescent for a cook, a camera for a photographer, a key for a storekeeper, a lyre for a musician, a wig-wag flag for a signalman.

An additional 10 cents brings you our new Spring Pattern Book, ready now. Smart, easy-to-make styles for the entire family.

Table, An Early Home Adjunct

The table as we know it today is not very basically different from the tables used in ancient Egypt, Greece and Rome. The trestle type of table, which was literally a board or plank placed over trestle supports, was the most common table throughout Gothic and Renaissance times, however, and it was not until the sixteenth century in England that the top was commonly joined to the base. From then on the table became more and more elaborate, the pedestal table developed as a more familiar type.

The draw top expanding table was first known in the sixteenth century as was the drop leaf and the extension table, but the eighteenth century developed these to their finest point. Variations of the basic table structure are infinite.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man's Harsh Criticism of Column Advising Wife To Vocally Apply 'Brakes' to Husband's Reckless Behavior Brings Stinging Reaction From Readers

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I know exactly why you published that sassy letter from "A. G. P." in Tuesday's column. It was just for the fun of listening to the resultant explosion. It ought to have much the same effect as dropping a lighted match into a gas tank. "A. G. P." declares he is "pretty het up" over what he calls your "dastardly" advice" (of January 15) to a worried wife,—who returned from a trip to discover that during her absence, her husband had given bachelor parties which resulted in damaged furniture, whispered gossip and missing possessions, including her prized "collector's item" of English china, which he had given to a young woman employe, whom he had been entertaining tete-a-tete. You told the wife to "put the brakes on the situation" by doing a bit of mild hell-raising.

Well, if "A. G. P." thinks he is "het up" over your advice, let me tell him that his temperature rates as zero, compared to my scorching reaction to his outrageous views. Of all the stupid, insensitive, loud-mouthed boors it has ever been my misfortune to meet in print, he heads the list. If he is a typical specimen of hale-bodied American man, on whose shoulders our national salvation rests,—and he hints that he is,—then I am willing, here and now, to give up hope of America's saving the world.

He says nothing of his social status. It isn't clear whether he is married, unmarried or divorced. But let us hope, for the sake of womanhood, that he is a perennial bachelor and will remain so. It is perfectly obvious that he is irreclaimably selfish, antisocial and uncivilized,—a carry-over of the primitive, lone-wolf type, who lives by the slogan: "Every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost." He believes, of course, that he is mature and sophisticated, whereas his ranting proclaims him to be psychologically arrested at about a 6-year-old level of social development. Even my intensely individualistic 10-year-old son has a greater sense of social responsibility, and more respect for other persons' possessions, than this man avows.

So the wife's complaint is pretty trivial, eh, Mr. A. G. P.? Let's suppose, my dear sir, that you were away on a business trip, during which you were entertained by business friends and associates (since you sneer at this wife's trip as probably having included more "pleasure" than "business"). And suppose that on your return home you discovered your wife had thrown some rowdy parties in your absence, during the course of which your treasured last bottle of costly old brandy had been consumed.

And suppose, further, that your wife, in an inexplicable burst of generosity, had given away to some philandering young buck that rusty old seventeenth-century heirloom flintlock—the piece-de-resistance of your personal souvenirs. What would you do? You wouldn't say a word, of course? You would realize in a flash that any sensible husband would just forget the whole thing. That is, if you didn't have apoplexy first! What a prize you would be for some woman. There is only one thing I would envy her—namely, her intestinal fortitude in putting up with you. That's all for now. (And thank you, Miss Haworth, for letting me get a load off my chest, too.) Sincerely,

Did the Shoe Fit, Accenting the 'Heel?'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Earlier this week, an irate man signing himself "A. G. P." took 15 minutes of his lunch hour (so he says) to write his first letter to any newspaper—a letter in which he abusively criticized one of your columns. His biased comment was such that it inspires me, too, to write my first letter to any newspaper—but one which reflects an opposite view.

It strikes me that his indignation is not that of an entirely disinterested party. More likely the other man's shoe fits him only too well, while giving an appearance that accents the "heel." Judging by his uncalled-for display of temper, can you imagine what would happen if he were to return from a business trip to discover that during his absence his wife had been entertaining gentlemen; that expensive furniture had been damaged during the revelry, and that she had impulsively bestowed upon one of her men guests a few of the choicest pipes in her husband's "hobby collection?" Would he genially accept her explanation that she hadn't understood how much these pipes had meant to him? Would he forget the whole thing? Or is it more likely he would raise the roof, howling imprecations at all and sundry?

Incidentally, for "A. G. P.'s" benefit, I am not an "old sourpuss." I am an up-to-the-minute wife and mother, and it is my privilege to have been married for 17 years to the same grand man, whose companionship I shall thankfully share so long as the good Lord wills it. And one ingredient in our marital success has been our practice of bringing our grievances into the open, where we thresh them out with a bit of mutual "hell raising," and then sensibly bury the differences forever and ever. Three cheers for your advice in this instance, Miss Haworth. Keep up your good work Sincerely, S. H. W.

We Are Credited With Sense of Humor

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am willing to bet that your sense of humor led you to publish "A. G. P's." 15-minute reaction without comment. And how right you were! It is difficult to believe that any person of adult years, who evidently wishes to be considered "an able man," could thus express himself, in all seriousness. One does not have to be a seer to divine that he belongs in the same class with the worried wife's husband. Indeed, there is warrant for strong suspicion that they are one and the same man, except that the man in the first instance was described as the father of grown children, whereas "A. G. P's." complaint is voiced in the falsetto squeak of a much more juvenile character. Sincerely, H. F. C.

The Gentler Sex

Workaday Observations

Persons who do all things so very easily,
Usually do them slipshod as well as breezily.

Serene, unruffled gals never in a hurry,
Cause someone else a lot of worry.

Those who complain most of so-called small detail,
Are in "big matters" seldom of much avail.

And those who of bright ideas make liberal contribution,
Are strangely among the missing when it comes to execution.

Today's Social Notes

(From the Truthtown Torch)

Despite the pall of war, Truthtown continues gay, social events being carried on as usual under the guise of defense parties.

Mrs. Roswell Clymer is giving a series of blackout parties in her rumpus room, which she has darkened and decorated with phosphorescent murals. Guests bring their own flashlights. These parties are proving especially popular with the younger set.

Not to be outdone, Mrs. Parvenu Popinjay is holding a canteen service salon every Sunday afternoon in her music room. The Popinjays' new modernistic air-raid shelter will be opened with a reception and dance Valentine's Day.

Mrs. Artemus Whiffle is giving a series of patriotic luncheons at which the menus will include only red, white and blue foods. A special decorator from New York is transforming the Whiffle dining room to represent the inside of a bomber.

From Soup to Nuts

Two famous families were joined yesterday in the marriage of Miss Rosalind Dingle, noodle soup heiress, to Orlando Flute 3d, grandson of the late nut cup tycoon. The wedding was attended by only about 700 of the close relatives and intimate friends of the two families.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, Elisha Pott Dingle, who, on his mother's side, is descended from Elbenezer Tidbitt, originator of the marinated shrimp. Matron of honor was the bride's sister, Mrs. Carleton Capers, wife of the scion of the famous Hollandaise sauce family. The maid of honor was Miss Barbara Jitters, whose grandfather built up the vast chicken patty shell fortune. Mr. Flute's best man was Elderberry Glide, jr., son of the banana split baron.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Marcus Aurelius Dirge, society pastor, who defied his family—the famous pink potato chip clan—to enter the ministry.

Defense a la Mode

Mrs. Montclair St. Vitus will forego her annual trip to Sun Valley to devote all her time to the Defense Fashion Show she will stage February 1 at the Hotel Swank. The show will feature uniforms for varying types of figures and cpmplexions.

"Many of our women," said Mrs. St. Vitus, "are having difficulty deciding in which type of service to volunteer. I think a preview of the uniforms will enable them to make their choices more wisely."

Jottings

Philander Plunkette, holder of Truthtown's divorce record, will delay his annual trek South in order to attend Mrs. Roswell Clymer's first blackout party next Wednesday night.

The Eustace Fifeblowers have closed their town house for the duration and will spend the winter at their Mississippi plantation. "If worse comes to worst," said Mrs. Fifeblower, "we may build a few guest houses on the plantation and live there permanently."

Mrs. Abou Ben Adhem has lent her name to head the list of sponsors for the Ball of Waterloo (formerly the Emerald and Champagne Ball). "Naturally Mrs. Ben Adhem will not be able to attend any of the committee meetings," explained Mrs. Wynkoop Bigwigger, chairman of arrangements for the ball, "but as a lover of humanity she is always ready to make some contribution to a good cause." (Just what cause the proceeds of the ball will go to has not yet been decided.)

Mrs. Ben Adhem, who is never accessible on the telephone, is understood to be spending the winter in her house in Adamtown, barricaded with sandbags.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

President Ignores Foes of Hillman

The snipers at Sidney Hillman have failed to get their man. The President simply ignored the effort of the John L. Lewis faction to replace Hillman as the war labor czar in the OPM - SPAB shake-up. The inside story is that the President told Hillman what he wanted done and gave him full authority to decide how the objective was to be accomplished. The big problem that faced Hillman was whether to keep his organization within OPM, and its successor, the War Production Board, or to centralize all war labor activities within the Labor Department.

And it is a fact that if Hillman had decided the war labor work should be transferred to the Labor Department, then he would have replaced Frances Perkins, as Labor Secretary. Hillman's decision to continue his organization as a part of the war production machinery saved Miss Perkins her Cabinet job. Hillman made his decision following a long conference with Donald Nelson, the No. 1 war boss. Nelson is said to have opposed a separate labor unit outside his jurisdiction.

Hillman's decision, however, doesn't necessarily preclude future action on all war labor activities being transferred to the Labor Department. By keeping Government labor activities scattered, the President has a key bargaining point for A. F. of L. and C. I. O. peace. The President was actually presented a plan which would have made the Labor Department a counterpart of the British Ministry of Labor as the new War Production Board is somewhat similar to the British Ministry of Supply.

Under such a plan, the Selective Service System, Employment Service, Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, job-training activities of such agencies as Office of Education and National Youth Administration and the labor division of the War Production Board would have been transferred to the Labor Department. Now Hillman has complete authority over the mobilization of industrial man power and the training of workers for war jobs and his jurisdiction extends to job-getting and job-training agencies such as the Employment Service and the Office of Education, even though they aren't officially under him.

FDIC on 44-Hour Week

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation will go on a 44-hour week Monday. FDIC is following a fad that's fast becomjng Government - wide. Interior, Agriculture, Justice, Treasury and Federal Works employes also will go on longer hours Monday. Incidentally, officials at nonwar agencies argue working hours must be extended because of the shortage of labor. They point out that war agencies are hiring away their employes and that competent replacements can't be had in many cases. Therefore more work and longer working hours face employes who remain on the job. Unquestionably there's something to the argument if something isn't done soon to train competent replacements, the Federal employe who works 44 hours a week will be lucky. The work week will be more like 50 hours.

Employes Compensation Commission, which was ordered to Chicago, is looking for space in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Atlantic City and New York. Apparently ECC won't go to Chicago, but it will leave Washington, despite contrary reports . . . The President has exempted the general counsel of the Board of Research and Transportation from civil service requirements . . . The draft is taking far more Federal employes into the Army than was anticipated a year ago. Treasury has lost 894; Commerce, 947; Veterans Administration, 761; Interior, 750, and Agriculture, 300 . . . A preliminary survey indicates that nearly 200 of Wage and Hour's employes will attempt to escape transfer to New York. If the President would appoint an administrator the number probably would decline considerably, depending on the appointee.

A Back Seat Driver?

When auto rationer Leon Henderson issued a statement that he had no intention of requisitioning civilian cars, he thought he was alleviating the Nation's fears. Instead, a postcard from Grand Rapids, Mich., indicates, he broke a gentleman's heart. The man wrote: "I have a '41 car I wish you would requisition. My wife insists on an auto I cannot afford. Don't answer this in writing."

Cut the Rug, Bossie

South Bend, Ind., Jan. 22 (A.P.).—A radio station here has received a letter from Alberta Richanadter, a farm girl, asking for a swing music program from 5:10 to 5:30 p. m. each day.

"We milk the cows then," she wrote, "and we find they give more milk when they can listen to swing music on the radio we have in the barn."

Baby-Broker Bill Before Committee

Full House Unit Expected to Act Today on Measure To Guard Adoptions

The House District Committee today is expected to act on the recommendation of its health subcommittee, favoring passage of the District "baby broker" bill designed to control child adoption agencies in Washington.

Urged by The Post in a series of special articles and supported by numerous civic organizations, the measure would require the licensing of all child placement groups and their strict supervision by the Board of Public Welfare.

The health subcommittee under the chairmanship of Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, approved the measure yesterday. Witnesses appearing before the subcommittee on behalf of the bill included Mrs. W. A. Roberts, director of the Council of Social Agencies; Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech, and Patricia Morse, director of the foster care service of the Board of Public Welfare.

Menace of Rats Told

Dr. George C. Ruhland, the District health officer, yesterday appealed to citizens to line up on the local health front and combat a war-time carrier of disease and death—rats.

Members of the Subcommittee on Health, before whom he appeared, promised support of his quest for funds to underwrite a rodent extermination campaign and praised his plan for a citizenry organiezd to combat the subtle danger of disease in filth-infected alleys and cellars as effectively as air-raid wardens are organized to fight death from the skies.

No pied piper will arise to protect the war-crowded Nation's Capital from the danger of typhus fever, Dr. Ruhland said in effect. He emphasized that it's a problem for every individual householder in the District.

Explaining that typhus fever in winter time is usually transmitted by fleas infesting rats, Dr. Ruhland said that five cases of typhus have been discovered in the District area.

2 Traced to Rats

Two cases were traced to rat carriers in the vicinity of Union Station, he said, where 5000 rodents were recently destroyed. Post mortem examination of the carcasses disclosed the typhus organism in 85 cases, he said.

The health department has submitted to the Commissioners a request for funds to intensify the control of rodents, "but the public must cooperate," he said. "We can't put an inspector in every home."

He urged that householders board up holes in cellars, set traps, and keep garbage tins tightly closed in proposing an organization as widespread and thorough as the air raid warden system.

Representative Dewey (Republican), of Illinois, a homeowner in the Southeast section of the city, told the subcommittee that the numbers of rats is increasing because the District garbage collection system is inadequate to keep up with the growing population.

William A. Xanten, superintendent of the local refuse collection service, said that his department is "facing a shortage of equipment in the near future."

Uniform Closing Day for Barbers on Agenda

The House District Committee today is expected to consider an amendment to the barber licensing law which, in effect, would limit the daily working hours of barber shops and close them all during the same 24-hour period of the week.

Under the present law, barber shops must close 24 hours during a week, but the 24-hour period can be taken any time during the week. There is no limit on daily working hours.

The amendment would authorize the board of barber examiners to hold a referendum, and on the basis of a majority vote among the District's 1400 licensed barbers, set the daily working hours of all shops, and the day of the week for closing of all shops.

Advocates of the bill, including the A. F. L. Barbers Union, told a health subcommittee of the District Committee yesterday that the measure would help curb chiseling among barber shop operators and overwork on the part of barbers.

Bill to Ask Housing Aid For Low-Paid

Special legislation to provide housing for overcrowded Washington, with particular attention to needs of the $900-$2200 income groups, will be introduced in Congress within the next few days.

Representative Lanham (Democrat), of Texas, with whom solution of the problem now seems to lie, said the bill is being prepared along lines suggested by Defense Housing Coordinator Charles F. Palmer and other public housing officials.

A brief hearing on the bill will be held, he said, with District Commissioners and members of the House District Committee invited to appear.

Dropped From Lanham Act

This low-income portion of a housing program announced for Washington by Coordinator Palmer was dropped from the last Lanham Act provisions when Congress failed to qualify Government workers as eligible to receive the same benefits accorded defense workers in industrial centers.

In the meantime, private builders expected to produce approximately half the 22,000 housing units asked by Coordinator Palmer by July 1 yesterday declared themselves stalled by red tape and "failure of defense officials" to recognize problems faced by them under priority regulations and by uncertainties about materials.

To qualify for the promise of priorities, the builders must plan homes that will sell for not more than $6000 nor rent for not more than $50 a month, plus utilities.

Probably 1200 of the hoped-for 10,000 homes are under way, builders estimate. Failure to center in one agency responsibility for carrying out the housing program was blamed by one builder for much of his trouble. "I had to see 25 officials before finding out it is impossible for me to build," he said.

Blame Cost of Land

Land inside the District of Columbia is expensive. Too expensive, one builder said, to make a $6000 house worth the trouble. If one goes outside the District, he pointed out, there are the added problems of streets, water and lights to be considered.

Builders say the figures show Government home building costs 10 per cent more than comparable work by private industry. With a 10 per cent subsidy or with more liberal mortgage and insurance provisions, they could go ahead without a materials guarantee—they claim—and the Government would get its money back.

Plans for New GAO Building Are Shelved

The Public Buildings Administration has shelved a projected 10-million-dollar new six-story General Accounting Office building for the "duration" to permit its temporary building program to proceed under full speed, it was learned last night.

Yesterday W. E. Reynolds, commissioner of public buildings, announced the locations of ten additional temporary structures, construction on some of which will start immediately. Two of the buildings are to be located on the block between Fourth and Fifth, G and H Streets Northwest, originally acquired for the General Accounting Office and now being cleared. GAO probably will be granted the use of these temporary buildings, it was understood.

The plans for the 10 buildings mark a new departure in District planning. According to Reynolds, the buildings are being scattered throughout the city so that they can be reached without going through the congested downtown area.

Offices for 15,000 Workers

Offices for approximately 15,000 employes of war agencies will be provided by nine of the buildings. The tenth will be a combination cafeteria to accommodate 4800 and PBA maintenance shop.

Four of the buildings, designated I, J, K and L, are being located in Potomac Park, south of the Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool. Presumably as a concession to those who have demanded that the beauty of the park be preserved, Reynolds announced that a row of trees south of the pool would not be disturbed to help mask them.

Additional reassurance was contained in Reynolds' remark that "the buildings are to be torn down immediately after their need as war offices has ended."

The buildings will be similar to other temporary buildings already constructed, having a house-type wood frame, asbestos board siding and other features permitting rapid demolition.

Work to Start Within 3 Days

The buildings south of the reflecting pool will be constructed for the Navy Department, with work to start within three days, Reynolds said. They will provide a total of 345,760 square feet of office space for 4300 employes.

The G. A. O. buildings will be designated O and P and will contain 235,000 square feet of space for 3000 workers. Buildings X and Y will be constructed on a site at East Capitol and Nineteenth Streets Northeast, opposite Eastern High School. Containing approximately 370,000 square feet of space, they will house about 4600 employes.

Building Z will be constructed at the juncture of Alabama Avenue and Naylor Street Southeast and will contain approximately 214,000 square feet of office space for about 2700 workers.

The cafeteria and shop combination will be constructed on the southeast corner of Seventh and Independence Avenue Southwest.

Money for these buildings will be supplied from a 25-million-dollar Congressional appropriation to help meet District space needs. Specific estimates for each building were not available.

The original six-story G. A. O. building was slated to cost $9,850,000, to be paid out of funds appropriated in October, 1940. It was to be of monumental type construction, the kind of building that normally takes a year or more to complete. Besides consuming too much time, it is also understood that the building would also gobble up large amounts of critical materials which will not go into the temporary buildings.

Model Survives Plunge From Train in D. C. Tunnel

An attractive 23-year-old model narrowly escaped death last night when she fell headlong from a southbound train in a smoke-filled tunnel near New Jersey Avenue and D Street Southeast.

She is Miss Frieda Lund, of 60 East Ninety-fourth Street, New York City, and is in Casualty Hospital suffering with severe face, head and body injuries. Physicians said the girl may be disfigured for life.

Miss Lund was found in a semi-conscious condition stumbling beside the railroad tracks in the tunnel by Private William Lisselberger, a sentry. She was removed to the hospital in an Army car.

At the hospital the girl said she had fallen from the train and staggered, half unconscious, toward the tunnel's exit. Dirt and blood covered her face, into which was ground big cinders. Through bruised lips she said:

"I was on my way from New York to Sarasota, Fla. for a vacation. When the train reached Washington, I went to the diner and had dinner. When I had finished eating, the train started to get under way. I left the diner and started to walk toward my coach.

"When I reached the corridor between two coaches, great clouds of smoke were pouring in. The smoke got in my eyes and throat. Then, before I knew what had happened, I found myself lying in the tunnel."

Police said a slipper and spots of blood were found 1500 feet from the tunnel exit.

Officials at Washington Terminal said they are trying to learn how Miss Lund could fall from the moving train.

Fund Asked To Extend River Route

$200,000 Ordered To Establish Road Between Key And Chain Bridges

An appropriation of $200,000 to extend the George Washington Memorial Parkway from Key Bridge to Chain Bridge on the Virginia shore of the Potomac was among the items passed by the House late yesterday in the independent offices appropriation bill.

The amount would be granted the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which could acquire about 2½ miles of river frontage, approximately 400 feet wide, containing about 145 acres.

In justifications laid before the House Appropriations Committee, made public yesterday, the Commission said the parkway extension is urgently needed to provide an additional approach to the new War Department building in Arlington County from both the District and adjoining Maryland and Virginia.

Stating that Virginia will make no contribution to the project, commission officials declared they believe it the requirement of the law that no money should be spent on the parkway before definite commitments are received from Virginia, Maryland or "other responsible sources" for half the cost of acquiring the land.

It was said the property already has been tentatively appraised at $400,000 and would be appraised again by appraisers selected by the commission. The corporation owning the property had agreed to sell for $400,000, and one of the company stockholders will contribute $200,000 under the agreement.

The property involved is assessed by Arlington County for $73,588, the commission said.

The release of the hearings of the committee revealed that District borrowers of the Home Owners Loan Corporation have repaid $5,198,000 or 41.5 per cent of their entire principal indebtedness. Some 401 loans, amounting to $2,260,040, have been paid in full.

Bids Being Received On Arlington Bridges

With three of 21 proposed bridges already under construction as part of the road system surrounding the War Department building area in Arlington County, the Public Roads Administration yesterday announced that bids are being received for the building of four more spans.

Bids on two bridges will be opened at 11 a. m. January 27 in the PRA offices at 1725 F Street Northwest. These two spans will be located in the abandoned Washington Hoover Airport and will carry a new stretch of United States Route No. 1 over the railroad spur line there.

On February 3, bids on the other two spans will be opened. One of the projects will overpass a clover-leaf intersection of the new Army-Navy Highway; the other will pass over the highway to allow taxis and buses to enter the War Department Building grounds.

Bridges under construction will take the Army-Navy Highway over the truck-route, provide access for Lincoln Memorial Bridge traffic to the heavy-duty highway, and carry the Army-Navy Boulevard from Columbia Island across Boundary Channel to the Virginia mainland.

$25 SALVAGE FIRST DAY—Workers of the Central Salvage Department, an organization designed to collect waste paper, scrap iron and rubber from homes in the Southwest defense area, got busy yesterday and salvaged $25 worth of material. Money will be used for the operation of air-raid warden stations. Mrs. Virginia Berns, sector warden, drives up to the air-raid warden depot in the rear of 331 G Street Southwest. Ralph Vawters, zone warden; Jimmy Lockhead, assistant deputy of salvage, and Robert Hull, deputy warden, unload the salvaged material

Cables to Parents Hint 2 Sons In Navy Were Seized at Guam

Parents of two youthful Washingtonians, one an ensign, the other a yeoman in the Navy, who probably arrived in Guam a short time, possibly only a few hours, before the Japanese attack began, have received cryptic cablegrams which indicate that their sons are prisoners of war in Japan, it was learned last night.

OWEN

MacGREER

The cablegram which merely read: "Am well, season's greetings," were received on January 12. Additional confirmation has since been received by the parents of one of the boys.

One of the youths is Ensign William Lee Owen, 25, son of the Rev. B. A. and Mrs. Owen, of 1701 Sixteenth Street Northwest, who had been assigned to Guam to serve as legal aid and attorney general to Capt. George J. McMillin, Governor of Guam. Rear Admiral Randall Jacobs, chief of the Naval Bureau of Navigation, notified Owen's parents that he arrived in Guam

The other youth is Ben MacGreer, 23, son of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Greer, 3914 Military Road. Although the Greers have not received any official Navy Department notification of the whereabouts of their son, Mrs. Greer, after talking with Mrs. Owen said she was sure that her son also was a Japanese prisoner. Yeoman Greer had been ordered to Guam to do clerical work on the same transport that carried Ensign Owen from Honolulu to Guam, she said.

Ensign Owen was born in San Antonio, Tex., and attended grade school and high school in Kansas City, Mo. He was graduated by William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo., with honors at the age of 18. He received an LL. B. degree from Harvard Law School when he was 21. While at Harvard he was awarded a $400 scholarship. After graduation from law school he assisted Col. William Donovan, coordinator of information, in private practice. Since January, 1939, he has been junior partner in the firm of Hinton & Heron.

Greer was born in Louisville, Ky. He has lived in Washington for eight years since his father became connected with the Veterans' Administration. He graduated from Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School and has studied law at National University. Last year he took and passed the Tennessee State bar examinations.

A member of the Naval Reserve, he was called to service last October.

Rent-Control Hearings Authorized

New Rules Issued To Permit Boosts Where Landlord And Tenant Agree

Authorizing formal hearings under the Rent Control Act, the Commissioners yesterday issued special rules and regulations governing application of the new law.

Rent Administrator Robert F. Cogswell may now schedule official hearings on cases which heretofore have been handled either by personal interviews or over the telephone.

The new rules authorize rent increases only in instances where both landlord and tenant agree on the higher fee. Application for increases must be accompanied by an affidavit from the tenant that he or she was not forced into the agreement. Action, under this provision, can be taken without a formal hearing.

Case in Point Cited

A case of this type was cited by Cogswell. A landlord, on January 1, 1941, when rents were "frozen," was charging $90 a month for certain living quarters. He spent some $3000 on repairs and improvements and hiked the rent to $165.

But when the Rent Control Act became effective, he was forced to go back to the original rent—even though the tenant was in accord with the increase.

The regulations further provide that complainants must pay 25 cents for registered mail in filing protests. The fee is used to cover cost of sending a copy of the complaint to the other party or parties involved.

Have 10 Days to Reply

Respondents, under the rules, are given ten days to reply before a formal hearing is scheduled. The hearing is to be held within that time if no reply is received. The administrator's decision, if not contested, becomes final in five days.

More than 600 complants are awaiting examinations and hearings, Cogswell reported.

Boyce Funeral Today

Funeral services for William L. Boyce, former Washington tailor who died Tuesday at Norfolk, Va., will be at 2 p. m. today at the Saffell funeral home, 475 H Street Northwest. Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Young Cautions Wardens on Use of Powers

Commissioner John Russell Young yesterday warned air raid wardens and auxiliary police against abuse of powers granted them under recently announced blackout regulations.

Members of the two units were authorized, under actual air raid conditions, to enter private homes—by force if necessary—to extinguish lights and enforce the new rules. Accompanying copies of the regulations sent out yesterday was a letter from Young which read in part:

"This authority places an exceedingly great responsibility upon these two services. It is to be exercised only in emergency during the periods of actual air-raid alarms . . . not otherwise, and then only when the circumstances are such that no other effective and prompt measures are available.

"An abuse of this authority," Young added, "may easily result in antagonisms between the services and citizens and seriously impair the usefulness of the services involved and the effectiveness of the protective measures for the security of the community as a whole."

Young admonished that the newly-vested authority "must be exercised with a great degree of good sense, restraint and judgment."

Like to Fight Fires? Join D.C. Auxiliary

Chief Engineer Stephen T. Porter of the District Fire Department, who needs volunteers for a civilian defense firefighting auxiliary, was thinking yesterday probably some men were believing they had to be "absolutely fearless" to join up with his division.

As a matter of fact, civilian volunteers who want to fight fires will not be permitted to take on the hardest jobs. Only real firemen get to climb the tall ladders and jump into the nets—like you see in the movies. Volunteers get to climb up only about 20 feet, or two stories.

Defense Coordinator John Russell Young and Chief Porter both believe volunteers would like to be firemen just as well as policemen—if they'd just give it a fair trial.

"Engine houses are friendly places," Private Crystal Smith said yesterday. Smith, who has been given a special job of drumming up auxiliary recruits, pointed out also that when a man takes the firefighting courses he really learns something helpful.

"A year ago in London, it was the London Fire Brigade and its auxiliary fighting to save their city. Call them heroic and they would laugh, but the result of their job remains. Now we need auxiliary firemen in Washington. Our task may never be so great, but may be just as vital," he says.

Approximately 900 volunteers are needed. They can join up at any engine house, or at the Civilian Defense Volunteer Bureau, 501 Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest. Since they must be trained, defense officials point out, they should join now and not wait "until a bomb falls."

Tydings to Speak

Westminster, Md., Jan. 22 (AP).—United States Senator Millard E. Tydings will speak at the second annual national defense dinner of the Soroptimist Club Wednesday, February 18. Members of the Westminster civic clubs will attend.

Victory Sidelights

Navy Yards Workers Contribute $1,700,000 to Bond Drive

A check for $1,700,000, representing the defense bond investments of civilian employes of the Navy yards and stations located in the continental United States, will be presented to Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau by Col. Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy, in the Treasury offices on February 3 at 8:30 p. m. The presentation will be broadcast over the N. B. C. Blue Network, locally over Station WMAL.

These bonds, which were sold by Navy issuing agents during the month of December, 1941, represents investments of $13.85 per month for each man participating. As a result of the Navy's payroll reservation plan started at the beginning of this year, it is anticipated that the monthly average will be increased to approximately $20 per man.

In addition to Secretaries Knox and Morgenthau, other high naval and Treasury officials present will include Rear Admiral Ray Spear, U. S. N., paymaster general; Rear Admiral Charles Conrad, U. S. Naval Reserve, former paymaster general, now Navy coordinator for defense savings bonds; Commander Gerald Eubank, U. S. Naval Reserve, deputy cordinator for United States savings bonds, and William S. Broughton, commissioner of public debt of the Treasury Depratment.

Forbearance Asked During Raid Tests

Dear Citizen:

Please have forbearance when you enter an office building undergoing a blackout evacuation test.

Elevators cannot run while the test is in progress, nor can you get out of the building until the all-clear sounds.

Approximately 50 Washington buildings are having their "maneuvers" each week now, according to Rufus Lusk, deputy air-raid warden in charge. The maneuver time is from 8 to 10 minutes. Deputy Lusk hopes you won't be too much inconvenienced and will cooperate willingly.

Legion Pushes Plan To Help in OCD

Executive Officer James M. Landis, Office of Civilian Defense, and National Commander Lynn U. Stambaugh of the American Legion, yesterday continued their conferences on a plan to work legionnaires into the OCD organization on a "specific assignment" basis.

With 1,100,000 members and 11,780 posts in virtually every community of the country, the legion has volunteered its total resources for home front duty.

Auxiliary Police To Receive 90 More

Approximately 90 members of the public order committee of the Washington Board of Trade will be sworn in this afternoon at 2:30 as a special headquarters detail of the Auxiliary Police Force, Odell S. Smith, chairman of the committee, announced today.

Maj. Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police, will administer the oath of office to the board members.

G. W. U. Opens Classes In Safety Training

A course in safety engineering to provide training for employes of contractors, public utilities and municipal and Government agencies was announced by George Washington University Wednesday.

Classes start January 26 and will continue for 90 semester hours. The tuition will be paid by the Government.

Candidates for admission to the classes are required to have two years of college or its equivalent. Prof. Frank A. Hitchcock, director of engineering extension, will have charge of the classes which will be held in university buildings, 725 Twenty-first Street Northwest.

D. C. Trade Group Hears R. A. F. Officer

"If you see bits flying around you know you have hit it."

That was how Wing Commander A. A. De Gruyther, of the Royal Air Force, described how at least one pilot could ascertain when he had sunk a submarine. The commander, speaking to the Junior Board of Trade luncheon meeting at the Annapolis Hotel yesterday described the warfare waged by British fliers against Nazi submarines.

Lawrence E. Gichner, chairman of the board's Victory Book drive, appealed for contributions. Ensign Lawrence S. Smith, U. S. N., former executive secretary of the board, paying a surprise visit, said that "perhaps we would be better aware of the danger threatening us if each one of us could be standing watch on board ship out in the Atlantic looking for the submarines that are operating only a few miles from our shores. Then you know that the war is upon us and that we must fight it out with everything we've got."

Raids Won't Disrupt Banking Routine

Don't count on that mortgage of yours getting lost if the bank holding it should have to answer a hurried air-raid alarm signal. The banks of Washington are well organized for emergencies, according to Rufus Lusk, deputy air raid warden in charge.

"They can clear everything to the vaults with the greatest of calm, have got it all worked out as who is to take what. Such orders as 'Smith, pick up that million dollars and walk—don't run—to Vault E' are mere routine with them now," Deputy Lusk says.

Civilian Defense Workers Hear Murphy

Seven hundred civilian defense workers, representing six areas of Washington heard Chief Air Raid Warden Clement Murphy compare the civilian defense corps to a military corps, at a meeting last night in the auditorium of Eastern High School, Seventeenth and East Capitol Streets Northeast.

Murphy said that the success of the program depended entirely upon its efficient operation. "Military efficiency is what is needed in emergencies," Murphy stated.

The communities represented at the meeting were: Randle Highlands, North Randle, Fort Davis, Summit Park, Anacostia and Hillcrest.

Jefferson Memorial Unveiling Tentatively Set for April 13

The Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission yesterday revealed plans to dedicate the new marble memorial on the banks of the Tidal Basin on April 13—if the White House approves.

Francis F. Gillen, assistant superintendent of National Capital Parks and supervisor of the memorial project for the commission, said the date—the 199th anniversary of the third President's birth—was under consideration, but that President Roosevelt, who will speak at the dedication, must give the final O. K.

The commission also plans to follow up the dedication with ceremonies next year—when the Jefferson bicentennial will be celebrated—at which the Jefferson statue will be dedicated. The statue is now being sculpted by Adolph Weinman in his New York studio.

Informed of the commission's plans for opening the three million dollar edifice this spring, Representative Sol Bloom, a member of the Jefferson Bicentennial Commission protested.

"Ridiculous! Absurd!" he exploded. "It would be terrible to dedicate it this year. Imagine, on the 199th anniversary of Jefferson's birth!"

Bloom, who championed the George Washington Bicentennial in 1932, insisted the dedication ought to be held off a year.

DEL RIO READY FOR DEBUT. Glossy plus gleaming adds up to gorgeous—and that's the effect of Del Rio, newest creation of Herbie Sachs, young night club impresario. Del Rio will open to the admiring public next Wednesday with an impressive array of strictly top-bracket talent, including Dick Stabile's Orchestra, Gracie Barrie, nationally known singer; the Stabile Sextet and the romantic barytone, Gordon Roberts. Around $70,000 has been poured into the making of Del Rio—and it looks it.

Monday's your night to parade to the opening of the Roosevelt Hotel's new Victory Room and dance to the fabulous music of Glenn Miller. The Victory Room, sleekly beautiful, is the personal creation of Mrs. Kramer, owner of the Roosevelt, also the Lincoln and Edison Hotels in New York. Mrs. Kramer has booked an awe inspiring succession of big name bands for the Victory Room, including those of Harry James, "Blue" Barron and Tony Paster.

THE ARNOLD TRIO, meaning "Pappy" Arnold and his boys, Harry and George, will start a week of "Gay '90's" songs and "barbershop" harmonizing at the Neptune Room tonight. The Arnold Trio took top honors in the recent Neptune "Talent Tryouts," and will be tricked out like dudes of 1899 for their new engagement.

UNUSUAL AND REFRESHING. El Patio is the only spot in town with its own theme song. This zippy musical tribute, "Let's Get Hep at El Patio," was written by Michael Pericin, leader of the Four Men of Rhythm . . . Cosmos Room patrons now blow whistles provided by Maestro Joseph Sudy for the chorus in that taking ditty, "Modern Design." They do the three required blasts quite neatly, considering . . . Carmela Lazari, of the Hi Hat, has just added "Remember Pearl Harbor" to her song repertoire. It's beautifully adapted to her clear soprano . . . The uncanny ad libbing of Emcee Alan Gale at Paul Young's. Trying to heckle Alan is like arguing with a porcupine. You just get stuck! . . .

GRANT THOMPSON, whose Swingcopators are scoring at the Neptune Room

Maner and Mignon, one of the country's most shimmering ballroom teams, opens at the Troika on Monday. The Troika management is currently purring because New York's swank Martinique opens next week with Troika talent, including Mata and Hari, now Troikaing, and Rosita Rios.

NITERY PERSONAL DEPARTMENT. "Admiral" Jimmy Byrd, promotion manager of Mayfair, has joined the Navy as a second-class yeoman. But we know he'll give the Navy first-class yeoman service. . . . Singer Jean Janis and her husband, Herb Eastman, both of Layton Bailey's band in the Metronome Room, leave soon for Atlanta, Ga., where Herb will resume his interrupted studies at Georgia Tech. . . . Jovial Louis, owner of the Copocabana, is looking forward to becoming a godfather on Sunday—to tiny Mary Teresa Ruiz, daughter of Frank Ruiz of the Copocabana orchestra. . . . A nearby bowling alley always looks like Restaurant "823" on Sunday afternoon. Because among the duck-pinners you'll always find Owners Fred Miller and Conrad Siebold, the Heintze Brothers and a big group of "823" patrons. . . . Margo Savoy, the aviatrix and former dancer, is the sister of Maestro Don Carper, of the Cafe Caprice. . . . A hastily stepping customer trod on Beverly Stull's instep lately at Burt's Trans-Lux. She'll be back on the bandstand as soon as the tootsie is better. . . . Organist Ida Clarke of the Lounge Riviera will soon take a short trip to Canada.

RATING APPLAUSE. The dashing, daring sword dance of Yourloff and Yoder at the Balalaika. Yourloff's the lad who could do some fancy Jap carving. . . . The resounding and virile songs of the Six Naval Cadets at the Lotus. These melodious lads recently stretched a four-week engagement into an eight-month stay at the Beverly Hills Club near Cincinnati. . . . The splendid baritoning of Washington's own Gene Archer at the Shoreham. He's of star stature.

An all-new show will open at the Casino Royal on Monday, says Manager Huey Liang. That's a hint, too, that you shouldn't miss the gay current revue.

SMART STUFF. The way Saxist Parley Eaton has stepped into playing novachord interludes at the Rainbow Room after some short but intensive coaching by Milt Davis. . . . The Crossroads idea of decorating their walls with multi-color plaques representing various drinks. The "Zombie" and "Pink Lady" plaques are funny as anything done by Disney.

EDIBLE THRILLS. The smoked oysters at the Old New Orleans. An item for expert epicures. . . . The Canape Marquis in the Pall Mall Room. Arthur Marchisio, maitre d'hotel of the Raleigh, says it's the same as the Ambrosia! Canape served by his brother, Ercole Marchisio, owner of New York's snazzy Cafe Marguery. . . . The chopped liver special at Restaurant "400"—a masterpiece of flavoring. . . . The savory tang of Olmsted's steaks. They're broiled over real hickory chips.

FOR WEEKENDS OF JOLLITY. A full vaudeville revue is being presented twice a night at Kavakos' Grill. The waiting line of customers stretching clear out on H Street. . . . The Nightingale is booming along like a battleship under full steam. The danciest music ever by Jack Maggio's band. Songs by Reathis Stevens.

Charley Parrish and his sharply clever six-man band have just arrived at the Log Tavern, that favorite spot for your dancers to congregate on the week-ends. The Parrish unit has just completed a long engagement at the Harbor Club.

Hall Fee Unpaid, 450 Wait Vainly For Concert

Although more than 300 persons clamored to get in, and 150 singers hovered behind stage ready to present a concert, the doors of Constitution Hall remained closed last night—because neither fee for hall nor for the lead performer, Baritone Reinald Werrenrath, had been produced.

It took almost an hour for the perplexed and disappointed ticket holders to give up the idea of attending the concert. And equally as long for the 50 members of the National Choral Society of Washington and 100 choristers of the B. & O. Glee Club of Baltimore, to give up the idea of presenting it. Finally, everybody went home, including the promoters of the recital.

The war fund of the Red Cross was to have benefited from the proceeds.

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Baseball got a great break from President Roosevelt, but the big-league club owners appear to be making the least of it. Within a week after the White House dignified the game by calling it a valuable wartime function, the club owners are haggling like fishwives over the subject of night ball.

POVICH

Clark Griffith has taken literally the President's suggestion that night games be extended because of the opportunity they would offer defense workers for recreation and relaxation. Griffith has proposed that night games be booked solidly for the three hot-weather months. Up in Brooklyn, Larry McPhail opposes more than seven night games and broadly hints that club owners who want more are acting "in selfish interest."

Out in Cleveland, Alva Bradley has rushed into print with an opinion that too many night games would ruin baseball as a day-time sport and prove a great harm in the long run. In Chicago, competition for patronage between the White Six and Cubs has raised its ugly head as an aftermath to the President's suggestion of more night games and is now breeding a fine row between the two major-league clubs of that city.

There was the suggestion by General Manager Jimmy Gallagher of the Cubs, whose park is unlighted, that his team might put Mr. Roosevelt's idea of more night ball into practice by playing in the White Six park. Whereupon Harry Grabiner, vice president of the White Sox, has reared up on his hind legs with the statement that "if more night ball is wanted in Chicago, the White Sox are ready to play it for the fans." It was an ungentle hint that the Cubs couldn't play at night in the White Sox park.

Harridge Protects His League

American League President Will Harridge displayed that he was more alert to protect his league than to follow the White House suggestion of more night ball by siding solidly with the White Sox in their threatened wrangle with the Cubs. Harridge, in a statement to the press, pointed out that "the Cubs are a little late on the question of night baseball. The late Lou Comiskey took a gamble when he reached into his pocket and spent more than $100,000 for lights, believing that night baseball would be popular in Chicago."

Harridge put the chtill on the Cubs' idea of playing under the White Sox lights when he added, "I should think the White Sox now would want to reap the benefit of their venture into lights. And if more night games are needed, as President Roosevelt suggested, it seems to me that the White Sox could play them."

Griffith says that Mr. Roosevelt's suggestion for more night games amounts to a command, or a mandate, but McPhail doesn't read that implication into the White House statement. "It sounded more like a casual thought to me," says McPhail, who wants no more than the seven night games now permitted each club at home by the National League. McPhail pioneered night ball in the big leagues for the Cincinnati Reds in 1935 but he also sponsored the seven-game limit on night play which his league adopted.

But the point we were making was that the big-league owners are contributing to a messy aftermath of the windfall it received from the White House. If they can't agree on policy until their February 3 meeting, then they might at least refrain from bursting into print with varied interpretations of what the President meant. Once upon a time when the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. were swinging briskly on each other, Mr. Roosevelt was constrained to utter his somewhat historic "a plague on both your houses," and that ought to be a warning to baseball's night-game factions.

14-Game Compromise Is Likely

The President's expressed hope for more emphasis on night games is right down Mr. Griffith's alley, of course, and the Nats' owner now has a sort of license to renew his fight for more night ball. Solid night-game booking for the three hot-weather months was Griffith's plan long before the President spoke. It didn't get to first base at the December meeting of the two big leagues, but Griffith can now talk from the seeming vantage point of White House support.

The likelihood is that the big leagues wil lcompromise and up the night-game limit to 14 in contrast to the traditional 7 night games, and that ought to please almost everybody. The first and last months of the season are scarcely conducive to night ball anyway, and 14 night games compressed into the remainder of the schedule would average nearly two night games a week. In cities with two big-league clubs, there would be at least three night games weekly.

Very innocently, Mr. Roosevelt probably did more to bring about a better balance of competition in the two big leagues by proposing night ball than the club owners have been able to achieve by their own efforts during the past several years. The program for more night baseball finds the poorer clubs happily equipped with lighted stadiums, while the richer teams—the Yankees, Red Sox, Cubs and Tigers—have no lights. They will get only the visiting clubs' slender share of the gate receipts, what with steel priorities precluding any hopes of erecting light towers, and the poorer teams will take down night-game profits that may be translated into better playing talent, which would bring about the league balance that has always eluded them.

'Pounds' Ready for Season

Pieces of Haight:

Miami, Fla.

Dear Boss:

Tell the baseball fans to weep no more, Boss. I saw that A. P. dispatch out of Washington saying that Ossie Bluege may play third base this year. Well, it looks like Manager Bucky Harris' worries are over as far as the left side of the Nat's infield is concerned. I realize Bluege has slowed up considerably, but with Haight playing shortstop he won't have to go more than 6 feet to his left.

HAIGHT

Ever since I signed that contract for a trial with the Nats there is one thing that I have been confident of and that is my ability to cover ground. I have decided not to play a deep shortstop but to keep in there close and I'll guarantee those waist-high bounders won't get by me. I figured I might have some trouble with hard-hit balls that skim along the ground but I have been practicing squatting quickly and I plan to be efficient at it before training camp opens.

Although I haven't written much about my baseball ambitions to date, I'm not wasting my time down here. I'm doing my best to get into top condition. In fact, I'm eating and sleeping baseball and there might be more truth than poetry in part of that statement if I don't stay away from those dog races, if you know what I mean.

Every chance I get, I throw a ball up against something and catch it on the rebound. This morning I spent an hour and a half tossing myself flies. I haven't started batting practice yet but I always could hit, so that part doesn't matter.

Boss, I'm so enthused about this big league chance that I'm always ready to sneak in a few minutes of work. Take the other night, I was dancing at the Ball Ball Club and my partner said, "Mr. Haight, you dance delightfully but I do wish you would take off that baseball glove it's making my hand greasy."

So I buttoned the glove on the side of my belt for the rest of the evening, just like the big leaguers do.

If you see Bucky Harris or Mr.

See HAIGHT, Page 22, Col. 8.

Tribe Batsmen Get Earlier Call to Camp

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Jan. 22.—Lou Boudreau swept into a deep bow today to the Cleveland Indians whose spring-time grumble is, "We don't have batting practice, we have pitching practice."

Proving he has ideas of his own and is losing no time putting them into effect, the "boy manager" is having his infielders and outfielders report to the Clearwater, Fla., training camp only two days after pitchers and catchers arrive February 22.

"We're conducting something of an experiment," the flashy 24-year-old shortstop conceded. "I don't know of any other club which does not give the pitchers at least five days' start.

"But I think we'll get better results if we bring our hitters and pitchers through the training season at just about the same pace. A batter has a hard time getting started if he has to step in cold against pitchers who are putting plenty of stuff on the ball."

Boudreau is confident that by the third day in camp most pitchers will be ready to throw the ball from the box to home plate—and that's all the newly reported batters will want them to do.

"It's possible that the older pitchers will take longer than that to get ready," he added, "but there always are plenty of youngsters in shape to throw almost the minute they report."

Giants' Babe Young Placed in Class 1-A

New York, Jan. 22 (INS).—Norman (Babe) Young, first baseman of the New York Giants, has been placed in Class 1-A by his draft board, it was announced by Secretary Eddie Brannick tonight. Young said he had not been advised just when he would be called to the service.

Turf Official Attacks 'Nerving' Practice

Mahoney Asks Horses Be Barred

Md. Commission Members Blasts Cruel Practice; Cites Recent Case

By Walter Haight

Post Staff Writer

Miami, Fla., Jan. 22.—What may prove the knockout punch to the cruel practice of unnerving horses was dealt today by George P. Mahoney, youthful and popular member of the Maryland Racing Commission in an address before the National Association of Racing Commissioners in convention here. Mahoney not only recommended that all unnerved horses be barred from the turf but offered free to all States the specifications and complete plans for a "nerve detector" invented by him.

After citing many cases of the deadening, by operation, of horses' legs, particularly the "Meadow Morn" incident, Mahoney warned:

"Such extreme cases so widely publicized, I believe, will eventually create public demand for some definite action by the racing commission to control this practice. Needless to say the photo electric eye, the starting gate, the totalizator and other improvements for which you men waged an uphill fight, have all immeasurably stimulated the confidence of the betting public. When then, can we not, through sensible control measures, assure this same public that their money is being wagered on four-legged animals rather than horses with three legs and a question mark? I note that some State commissions have already adopted regulations prohibiting nerved animals from racing, and others are considering control measures.

Would Abolish Practice

"If we do not take action now, I feel certain the various humane societies throughout the country, will take steps to abolish this unsafe practice, just as the Federal Department of Narcotics took measures to control the drugging of horses, which resulted in the salvia test.

"To sum it up, these are the following to keep well in mind. First, a nerved horse or one in which the nerve has been blocked by an anesthetic presents a potential danger to human life because that horse may break down without warning while running under the strain, and high rate of speed, to which a racing animal is subjected. The rider's life is endangered as well as the horses' life and the life of every other horse and rider in the field.

"Secondly, the desired purpose of these operations are not served. They were not devised by veternarians originally to enrich a race horse owner at the cost of human life or sacrifice of the animal, but rather to relieve certain chronic lamenesses. In draft animals, and then only as a final measure to prolong the usefulness of these draft animals in some field requiring less strain."

In a speech read by Commissioner Frank Small, the abolition of unnerving was also advocated by Chester M. Hockley, chairman of the Maryland body. Hockley, however, maintained the immediate barring of those horses would work a hardship on persons who purchased or claimed unnerved horses without being aware that they had undergone such an operation. His plan was to set a specific date and any horse unnerved after that date would be ruled off the turf.

Ring Champion Cochrane Honored By New Jersey

By the United Press

Newark, N. J., Jan. 22.—Welterweight Champion Freddie Cochrane was presented a plaque tonight for being New Jersey's outstanding professional athlete during 1941.

Cochrane, now in the Navy, lives at Elizabeth. The award had been voted him in a poll of 500 sport writers, officials and coaches, and was made at the Newark Athletic Club's annual dinner.

John Borican, Negro runner of Asbury Park, received the awards for being the State's leading A. A. U. athlete. Bob Davies, Seton Hall basketball player, was presented with the outstanding intercollegiate award, and Al Netcher, of Asbury Park High, the outstanding scholastic award.

Gallaudet Busy; Columbus Idle; G. U. Off to Army

Gallaudet will go to Towson tonight for a Mason-Dixon Conference engagement with Maryland State Teachers College in the only game scheduled for local college court teams. Columbus had a date with Shepherd State Teachers College at Tech but the West Virginians called for a postponement of the game due to illness on the squad.

Gallaudet will continue its Conference play tomorrow night against Bridgewater on the Virginia court. Towson and Bridgewater are the current cellar clubs of the conference, both without a victory, and should Gallaudet win both games they would climb into contention for a playoff berth.

Georgetown will leave today for tomorrow afternoon's test with Army, a 43-32 victim of George Washington on Wednesday.

Purdue Coach Stripped of Director Post

By the Associated Press

Lafayette, Ind., Jan. 22.—The board of trustees of Purdue University voted today to relieve A. H. (Mal) Elward of his duties as athletic director but retained him as head football coach until December 31, 1942.

There was no indication as to whether Elward would be retained as football coach after that date.

Members of the board said the action was taken in three separate steps. They were:

1. That the positions of director of the division of physical education for men (athletic director) and head football coach be divided.

2. That Elward be retained as head football coach until December 31, 1942, at a salary to be determined by President Edward C. Elliott.

3. That the president of the university be instructed to recommend a properly qualified person for early appointment to the position of director of the division of physical education for men.

Shakeup Long Rumored

Elward's contract for the dual position would have run until June 30, but it was indicated a new athletic director probably would be appointed before that time.

Rumors that a shakeup in the Boilermaker athletic family was due have been current since the close of the football season, in which Purdue won only two games, tied one and lost five.

Elward has been head football coach at Purdue since 1937 and athletic director since February 1, 1941. He became head football coach when the late Noble Kizer was forced to retire because of illness. For a time the athletic directorship was handled by President Elliott. Elward was given the job after Kizer's death.

The best season Purdue has had under Elward was in 1938, when the team won five games, lost two and tied one.

Southeastern Schools May Use Freshmen

Conference Divided on Football Question; Vandy Coach Sanders Favors Move

By the Associated Press

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 22.—Southeastern Conference schools, their athletic ranks thinning steadily due to armed service calls, may call on freshman manpower to bolster varsity football squads this year.

The much-bandied proposal, on which conference coaches and athletic directors are about equally divided at present, likely will be aired fully at a special S. E. C. meeting in Atlanta in March.

"It looks like it'll be necessary for us to play freshmen," declared Coach Red Sanders of Vanderbilt. "With our small squad (33 men last year) it'll hurt us a lot more to lose five men than it would for some of the others to lose 12 or 15."

Sanders indicated Vandy would be willing to initiate a move to have the eligibility rules changed "if nobody else did."

Butts Opposed

Down Georgia way, however, Coach Wallace Butts and his victorious Orange Bowlers aren't particularly sold on the plan.

"Whether we win or whether we lose, it would be better for football to avoid playing freshmen except as a last resort to keep the game going," declared the roly poly Georgian. "We've lost more players than anybody and we still could get up a team—without playing freshmen."

Railbirds figure, however, that if All-America Frankie Sinwich returns next year, Butts could chuck a few coeds into the line-up and still have quite a football team.

Tulane's athletic director, Dr. Wilbur C. Smith thought the use of freshmen "essential for continuance of our schedules and should help the game of football," while the school's coach, Lowell (Red) Dawson said:

"I'm not sure the use of freshmen will be essential, but in another month we'll have a better idea."

U. of Virginia's Dudley Signs With Steelers

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Jan. 22.—Bill Dudley, University of Virginia All-American has signed to play pro football with the Pittsburgh Steelers it was reluctantly admitted tonight by Bert Bell, Steelers' tycoon.

Official announcement of Dudley's signing will be made following his graduation. Virginia grid captain plans one season of pro football and will then join the Army. He will become eligible for Selective Service at the end of the 1942 grid season.

Before signing Dudley obtained consent of his parents who live in Bluefield, W. Va. Dudley's reason for signing for pro football is to obtain a small stake to finance him after he finishes his Army enlistment.

Manassas Firemen Win at Ft. Belvoir

The Manassas fireman basketball team took its seventh victory of the season Wednesday night when it downed Company C, Thirtieth Engineers, of Fort Belvoir, by a 29-24 count. Eleven points by Herb Saunders was high for the game.

Cochran Edges Otto Reiselt In Cue Thriller

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 22.—In one of the greatest uphill battles of all billiards history, Welker Cochran, of San Francisco, today defeated Otto Reiselt, of Philadelphia, 50 to 45, in 73 innings.

It was a play-off of their match suspended Tuesday because of Cochran's illness. The victory heightened the San Francisco player's hopes for the world's three-cushion cue championship.

When the two-day intermission was forced on Reiselt and Cochran Tuesday, the Pennsylvania Dutchman was leading, 34 to 17, and the match had gone 39 frames. Today Cochran scored 33 points to Reiselt's 11 in the final 34 innings, necessitated because each played his shots safely.

Aided by a run of 6 in the forty-first inning, a 2 in the forty-fifth, a 3 in the forty-seventh and 2 in the forty-ninth, Cochran at that point was behind only 37-32. He made a point in the fifty-first while Reiselt was being shut out, and a run of 3 in the fifty-second left Welker only a point back at 37-36.

Up to the sixty-second inning it was nip and tuck. In the sixty-third Cochran scored twice to tie the count at 43 to 43. Reiselt picked up a point in the sixty-fourth but Cochran made two in the sixty-eighth to go one ahead. Otto got it back in the seventy-first but Cochran also counted one in his seventy-first to forge ahead for the last time.

While Reiselt was being blanked the rest of the way, Welker picked up two points in the seventy-second and, needing two to go out, made them in his next turn at the table.

The victory left Cochran with six wins and one loss, a record identical to that of Hoppe, defending champion. If both Hoppe and Cochran win their next matches, their scheduled encounter tomorrow, on the final night of the tournament, will be for the championship.

Cooper's 68 Second Best; Smith Has 69

Hogan's Round Seven Under San Francisco Course Par; Ties Little's Record

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Jan. 22.—Trim Benny Hogan, the 137-pound golfer with a heavyweight punch in his clubs, made the game look easy today as he took the first round lead of the 72-hole San Francisco Open tournament with a seven-under-par 65

On a course so soggy football mud cleats hardly would have assured firm footing, Hogan proceeded to take the place apart. He chalked up a 32-33, a score so unusual under adverse conditions it prompted Jimmy Demaret, of Detroit, to wisecrack, "we don't say how many strokes over par any more. Its how many strokes over Hogan."

Hogan's 65 tied the competitive course record, set by Lawson Little as an amateur. Par for the 6520 yard California Club layout is 36-36—72.

Long Game Tells

Hogan racked up seven birdies. On the four par 5 holes, his tremendous shots carried him to the edge of the green. He chipped up each time to leave himself 3-foot putts.

Hogan finished the day three strokes ahead of little Harry Cooper, veteran from Minneapolis, who put together a 33, 35—68. He dropped 15-foot putts for birdies on the first, twelfth and fifteenth holes; a 12-footer on the eighth and nearly holed out on the 150-yard third, where his ball stopped an inch from the cup.

Seven others of the starting field of 150 broke par—Horton Smith, 69; Harry Bassler and Dick Metz, 70 each, and Lawson Little, Denny Shute, Ralph Hutchinson and Lloyd Mangrum, 71 each.

Long hitters were in their glory. The longest, Jimmy Thomson, was riding high until he passed the fifteenth hole. At that point he was 4 under par. On the sixteenth he took a bogey 4, then blew up on the seventeenth with an 8 on the par 5 test. He hit two drives out of bounds.

Stays in Tree

The highlight of a dismal day was provided by an old hand at the business of coming through with the unusual—Clayton Heafner, of Charlotte, N. C. Two years ago the former candy maker made headlines by hitting his ball into a tree during the Oakland Open. He did the same thing today.

On the thirteenth, his ball landed in a small tree, about 3 feet off the ground. Heafner pulled out a putter and attempted to bat it down. Instead, the ball bounced up a few inches and stayed in the limbs.

He whacked it out on the next try, then calmly knocked it on to the green and dropped a 15-footer for a 6 on the par 4 hole. He finished with a 37-37—74.

While nine players were beating par and seven others were equaling it, one top favorite, Byron Nelson, of Toledo, winner of the Oakland Open last week, could do no better than a pair of 38s for a 76.

GAO Wins Over Sandy Spring, 39-28

A fast breaking G. A. O. five downed the crack Sandy Spring (Md.) five there last night, 39-28.

It was the second setback in 12 starts for the Marylanders. Harry Fraley, of the losers, captured high scoring honors with 15 points.

Writer Joins Navy After Interviewing Fred Apostoli

Former Champ's Pep Talks About New Life As Tar Stirs Scribe

Harry Postove Enlists After Filing Story To Virginia Paper

(Editor's note: Three days ago the United Press assigned Harry Postove, assistant sports editor of the Norfolk (Va.) Ledger-Dispatch, to interview Fred Apostoli, former world middleweight champion who is now a athletic director in the Navy. Postove filed the following story, along with this note:

"Dear Sirs:

"I hope this article meets with your approval. Fred is really a changed man. In fact, he gave me so many pep talks about the Navy that I decided to enlist myself. I go in Monday as a second class yeoman.")

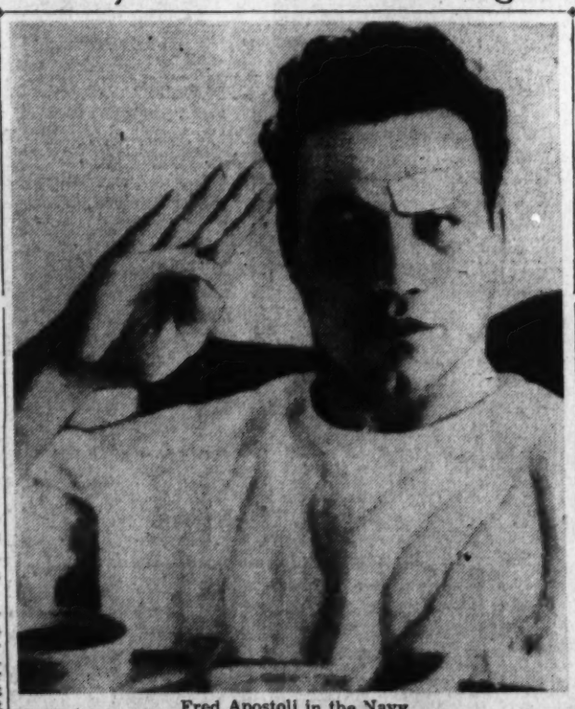
By Harry Postove

United Press Staff Writer

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 22.—First Class Boatswain's Mate Fred Apostoli, the San Francisco bellhop who fought his way up to the world middleweight championship and then slid back down just as fast, tossed a warning at the boxing world today, "Don't count me out yet, boys, I'm coming back."

"Don't count me out yet," he repeated as he pulled his blue uniform shirt over his husky shoulders, "because I've only just begun to fight. I'll be right in there scrapping for the crown again, and when I get it you can just direct all the credit to the United States Navy."

Apostoli, who at 29 years of age weighs 165 pounds, has scored three straight knockouts under the colors of the U. S. fleet and says flatly that the Navy has made him a changed man. The food and the environment have done things to him he didn't think were possible, and he is waiting impatiently for his next bout in February.



Fred Apostoli in the Navy

Changed His Life

"It wasn't so long ago that I was ready to jump out of a window," he said with a grin. "I was kayoed by Ceferino Garcia, I went to the hospital with an appendectomy and I was a pretty sick boy much of the time. But this new life here in Norfolk has changed all that."

Apostoli, who won the New York State version of the 160-pound crown by knocking out Young Corbett III late in 1938 and lost it again to Garcia less than 11 months later, was one of the first fighters to join the colors when Lieut. Comdr. Gene Tunney began touring the country for men to carry on a "physical fitness" program within the ranks.

At that time he had been written off by boxers as a has-been and had spent eight months in retirement trying to regain his health. In his own words he "felt like a deflated balloon" and he himself believed he was past his peak. But his sentiments have changed.

Today he has come a long way back. He is working hard as a physical director, is fighting on his own when he can get leaves and—just for a boxer's holiday—he is conducting weekly smokers among the Gobs in an attempt to discover some new talent among his mates.

Alohort Wins Flagler Handicap in Easy Fashion at Hialeah

Nickie Wall Pilots Cohort 3-Year-Old

Victor Pays $10.30; Sir War Is Second, Marksman Finishes Third in Feature

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 22.—A. C. Ernst's Alohort, one of four Flamingo Stakes eligibles in the field of a half dozen 3-year-olds, whirled to an easy two-length victory in the Flagler Handicap here this afternoon. Nick Wall, who reported here when Santa Anita's meeting was canceled, earned his first success of the season astride the Cohort colt, a $10.30-for-$2 shot. The victor was timed in 1:18 4-5 for the 6½ furlongs.

Sir War, from the Circle M Ranch, and favorite, was second in the role of favorite, a length and a half in advance of E. K. Bryson's Marksman. The latter and Kokomo were the two starters not nominated for the $25,000 Flamingo.

Higher Attendance

Today's attendance was 9140, against 8684 a year ago.

Alohort, in 1941, started 14 times and won twice, earning $2980. This year, in three outings, he has been victorious twice and gleaned $1850. He had a rough journey in the recent Hialeah Stakes, winding up tenth. He apparently is an improved colt and finished today as if he would go a longer distance.

Sir War broke on top but quickly dropped far back as Marksman dashed into a lead of several lengths. Alohort was sent into the runnerup position. Jockey Wall taking aim on Marksman and in no hurry to make his move. The coal black Alohort gained slowly but surely around the turn and finally put Marksman away when they entered the final furlong. Alohort easily pulled clear as Sir War rallied to beat the fatigued Marksman. Incoming, well supported, failed to come on after being well placed around the bend.

'Watch Out, Orioles,' Say a Trio of Eagles' Wives

Pro Figures Prove Talent Of Hutson

Don Hutson won his fourth pass-catching championship of the National Pro League in the last seven seasons and in the late games was smashing two records every time he nabbed a pass, according to official figures released yesterday in Chicago.

The Green Bay Packer end caught 10 touchdown passes among his total of 58 passes received and gained 738 yards. Cecil Isbell, the league's leading passer, was on the pitching end.

Dick Humbert, the former Richmond, Va., University end with the Philadelphia Eagles, gained second honors in his rookie year with 29 passes, just half as many as the leader. Bill Dewell, of the Chicago Cardinals, was third with 28.

Wayne Millner was first among the Washington Redskin ends and seventh in the league with 20 completions for 262 yards. Bob McChesney was next with 19, including two touchdowns passes to Millner's none.

Ray Hare and Andy Farkas of the Redskins each nabbed a dozen passes, Bob Masterson 11, Joe Aguirre and Ed Cifers ten each, Ed Justice and Dick Todd eight and Al Kreuger seven, Bob Seymour six and Roy Zimmerman five.

Mrs. Burrage, Hickey and Mundey Hope for Revenge in Match Tonight

Three attractive hockey widows yesterday branched out with two predictions as they looked ahead to future games involving the Washington Eagles.

Their predictions were:

1. That the Washington Eagles will round back into stride and gain a full measure of revenge over the Baltimore Orioles, a recent 8-5 conqueror, in Baltimore, in tonight's game at Riverside Stadium.

2. That the Eagles are a far finer team than their present standing indicates and will terminate the current season a big winner, finishing 1, 2 or 3 in the Eastern League race and qualifying for the championship playoffs.

Wives Agree

Mrs. Len Burrage, attractive wife of the great Washington defenseman; Mrs. Les Hickey, pretty brunette wife of the eagle-eyed winger, and Mrs. Ernie Mundey, honey-haired wife of the veteran center, are unanimous in their belief that the Eagles tomorrow night will dish out some of the punishment they had to take against Baltimore last Sunday.

"Ernie was pretty badly shaken up in that game," the comely Mrs. Mundey will tell you, "but he wouldn't admit it—he never does. He is all fired up with the desire to get back at those Orioles, however, and I'll be rooting hard for all of the boys to get their revenge."

Mrs. Hickey, quiet-mannered and unassuming, likewise is convinced that the Eagles will spread their wings against the Orioles.

"Les doesn't say much about it," she says, "but he's got that business-like way about him that means no good for the Orioles next time."

Fears Fights

"You know Len," his pretty wife says, "He's a hard fighter anyhow, and he doesn't like much the way some of those Orioles mussed up some of our kids last Sunday. My only hope is that he doesn't get in any fights. I get mighty nervous sometimes when Len gets worked up during a hockey game."

Tonight Baltimore invades Riverside at 8:30 and immediately after the game the Eagles are to hop a train for Boston, where they are to meet the Boston Olympics tomorrow night.

Little Kiss Wins Purse At Fair Grounds Oval

New Orleans, Jan. 22 (AP).—Little Kiss, J. C. Ellis' fast mare, showed a clean pair of heels to a good band of sprinters today in the Galvez Pure, six-furlong dash that topped the Fair Grounds program. Alertly ridden by Eric Guerin Little Kiss drew into a long lead to win easing up over the Lexbrook Stable's Sir Kid, with Charles S. Howard's Present Arms a fast-finishing, but well-beaten third.

Little Kiss paid $11.80 for $2.

Kovatch Named Coach At Illinois Wesleyan

Bloomington, Ill., Jan. 22 (INS).—Johnny Kovatch, former Northwestern University football star, tonight stepped into the shoes of his boss and former teammate, Don Heap.

Kovatch was named to succeed Heap, who resigned to accept a civilian athletic director's post, as head football and basketball coach at Illinois Wesleyan University. He has been Heap's assistant and in addition coached track and baseball.

Gonzaga Five Meets Xavier Here Today

An infected arm which kept him out of the Purple's latest game may again force Gonzaga High to do without the services of Reds Murphy today when it plays host to Xavier High, of New York, at Turner's Arena at 3:30.

Meanwhile other Gonzaga players are alarmed over advance reports of the Xavier five, led by Capt. Jim McFarland. The latter has averaged 12 points a game in the invaders' outings to date, and his main assistant is Al Baumgartner, a 220-pound, 6-foot-2 center. The team is coached by Frank McGuire, a former St. John's, of Brooklyn, standout.

Kentucky Racing Will Go On, Thinks Legislative Head

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 22 (AP).—A bill before the Kentucky General Assembly proposing to abolish horse racing in the Bluegrass State for the duration of the war "doesn't stand a chance of passing," a leader in the House of Representatives said today.

The measure was introduced yesterday by Representative Pink Curd, of Calloway County, who is a breeder of saddle horses.

Curd said he didn't have anything against horse racing but that "the sport just isn't in harmony with the war effort."

In addition to outlawing horse racing at the State's four tracks—Churchill Downs, scene of the famous Kentucky Derby; Keeneland, Latonia and Dade Park—the bill would abolish the State racing commission. The measure has not yet been referred to any committee.

Penn Alleys To Give Show For Charity

Julian Himmelfarb has lined up a galaxy of star attractions for Sunday night at the Penn Recreation Alleys that promises to be one of the main magnets for bowling fans of the area.

Leading off the long list of feature events will be a head-to-head match between pint-size Jay Wolfe, 12-year-old bowling expert, and a midget opponent yet to be selected. Following that will be another singles encounter between the Masked Marvel and Abe Weinberg, while on adjacent drives the Penn District League quintet will tie up with Roger Peacock's Bethesda team.

June Fontana, comely young high school girl who is perhaps better known as Miss Penn Recreation, will keep score for the team match and add interest to the occasion because of her pulchritude.

Grace Vitality, well known radio singer, is on the program to sing the national anthem. The match is to benefit the "Mile o' Dimes" drive for infantile paralysis sufferers and a hat collection will be taken up during the matches. The events will start promptly at 7 o'clock Sunday night.

Fishing by Jack Bell

Fly-Fishing Threatened by Bird Society

The sport of fly-fishing throughout America is threatened by a campaign for nationwide outlawing of feathers needed by fly-tyers.

JACK BELL

The National Audubon Society sponsor of the campaign, has issued a bulletin "Wild Birds and Fly Fishing Is America Big Enough for Both?" in which the belief is expressed "that American sportsmen . . . will approve of both State and Federal legislation that will end the commercial exploitation of wild birds for any purpose whatever, including fish flies."

Frequent reference is made to "market hunters" and the possibility is offered of their exterminating wild birds "to meet the increasing demands of fly-tyers;" this in face of the fact that American fly-tyers estimate that their total annual consumption of wild bird plumage could be met by the legal kill of game birds during any one day of the open hunting season.

Kenneth A. Reid, executive secretary of the Izaak Walton League of America, in a recent editorial in Outdoor America, relates that "thousands of sportsmen-conservationists who enjoy shooting birds during the open season and who get enjoyment out of fashioning feathers into flies of their own creation, would in the eyes of the law be potential criminals until they could prove the contrary."

The National Audubon Society took sharp issue to this statement. The Society's answer to this was, "As the plumage law was passed in New York State, there is nothing whatever to prevent hunters from freely using the feathers of birds legally taken for the tying of their own fish-flies. Nothing in the law prevents this hunter from giving feathers to a friend. There is nothing in the recommended legislation that would make a violator out of a fisherman using a fly containing wild bird plumage. All that the law is intended to do is to prevent the commercial use of feathers, which means that it is intended to prevent possession for sale, offering for sale, or sale of such feathers. Furthermore, it is not true that individuals possessing the feathers of game birds legally acquired are regarded as 'potential criminals.'"

On November 21, 1941, John H. Baker, executive director of the National Audubon Society, took exception to the editorial by Reid, in Outdoor America.

Since Mr. Baker in that release characterized as "serious misrepresentation" certain statements by the writer, we feel obliged to make the following comments.

The Audubon release is devoted to an attempt to make the league's position appear inconsistent with its platform and principles on the premise that any use of the feathers of wild birds is commercialization of wildlife. We admit that this makes a good sound talking point, but maintain under the circumstances in the present instance that it is solely a theoretical talking point without any practical application, and contrary to sound conservation principles.

By attempting to make the use of feathers the main issue—feathers which would otherwise be wasted and are available in quantities far in excess of any possible demand regardless of legislation—lie any sound conservation program; namely consideration of all values. It says: "The Izaak Walton League of America should be able to think straight on the subject of protecting wild birds if it clearly keeps in mind that the major objective is to stop the commercial traffic in wild bird feathers."

There is where the League heartily disagrees with the Society. Mr. Reid says, "We are not interested in feathers, but sensible, sane, bird protection and management. Feathers may or may not be incolved. They quite obviously are not in the case of American game birds and unprotected, or pest birds. As opposed to the Audubon statement of the major objective as quoted above, we contend that the major objective is sound conservation and management of wild bird life so that rare and diminishing species may get all possible additional protection without dissipating those efforts on game birds and unprotected or pest birds such as crow, starling and English sparrows, neither of which category would be benefited one iota by the societies anti-feather legislation."

It is pertinent to inquire how the society can reconcile its position when it not only agrees to but writes the New York law and the declaration of policy which would if upheld by the courts, legalize for the next six years the sale of all these illegal feathers contained in present inventories.

Western Guns for Central Setback Today

Anacostia, Wilson Also To Oppose

Vikings' Unbeaten Mark Threatened By Raider Club In Series Bill

There is no verification for it, but the rumor is that Central High's basketers will meet their first interhigh series conqueror today when they tangle with Western in the feature end of a doubleheader at Tech. The opener, at 3:30, sends Anacostia against Wilson.

Even Coach Jack Ray, of Central, feels that his club is headed for trouble.

"So far," he says, "we've faced only set-ups, or at least the weakest teams in the series. From now on, however, the going gets rough, what with Western, Roosevelt, Wilson and Tech to play. Our inexperience may hurt horribly despite our size and fighting spirit."

Have Won Three

Included on Central's list of "set-ups" are Eastern, a pre-season favorite, Coolidge and Anacostia. But in Western the Vikings will be meeting a foe which is supposed to have everything, hasn't shown much of it yet, and thus may be ripe for a kill.

Western's veterans lost both inter-high games by the narrowest of margins, one to Roosevelt and one to Wilson. Their one triumph in the league was by 12 points over Tech, a team which held Wilson to a 2-point victory.

Particular interest may be attached to the scoring battle of Jimmy Karas, of Western, and the Vikings' Teddy Thomaides. The first specializes in set and under-the-basket shots, while Thomaides is an exponent of the running "circus shot."

Wilson Favored

In the afternoon's inaugural Anacostia will be, to coin a phrase, trying to catch lightning in a paper sack. Considering the number and types of upsets registered in the series so far, however, it could manage to solve Wilson's zone defense and win.

St. John's and Bethesda, both victims of Georgetown Prep in their latest starts, come to blows to headline the remainder of the 10-game scholastic schedule today. Game time will be 8 p. m. at the Barons' gym.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE

Anacostia vs. Wilson at Tech, 3:30.
Central vs. Western at Tech, 4:30.

Fraley Upsets Ray Steele In Mat Bout

By Oscar Elder

Pat Fraley, the California strong boy, pulled an upset last night when he sabotaged Ray Steele before some 1500 fans in what proved to be one of the best wrestling shows of the season at Turner's Arena. Patrick's triumph was particularly sweet, for it was this same Steele who sent Fraley home with the miseries several weeks ago.

The bout had everything—science, rough stuff and referee-baiting—and it kept the faithful in an uproar for 23 minutes, until Fraley caught Steele coming off the ropes fast and clipped him with what is known to the trade as a flying toehold.

Both men weighed well over 200 pounds each, and they came out fast intent on mayhem. Steele got in the first plug when he drove Fraley to the ropes with a bear hug. He quickly backed this advantage with some choice slugs to the whiskers, but Pat rolled out of the way and dropped a crushing head scissors on his fellow Californian.

Referee Gets It

At this point Referee Casey Berger was forcibly brought into the picture. Fraley, generally a stolid citizen, became incensed when he felt that Berger was tolling off the count on Steele too slowly. He showed his pique by grabbing a hank of Berger's hair and giving a mighty tug. This overt action shifted the war theater, and as these two were squared off, Steele revived and took a pot shot which landed on one of Berger's glims, annoying that worthy slightly more than somewhat.

From here in it was tooth and nail, with each lad bent on spreading unhappiness. At the 18-minute mark Steele had Fraley in trouble with an armlock, which kept Pat on the mat for three minutes. Then Fraley wiggled out and found a leg split which had the rugged Steele torso spelling out V—for vicious.

But Steele, with superhuman effort, worked clear and bounced off the ropes intent on a flying tackle. Fraley was waiting for him and clipped him with the toe hold as Steele plummeted off the strands, and the show was over.

Rudy Dusek Wins

In the semi-windup, rough Rudy Dusek borrowed some of Hindu Nanjo Singh's strategy and employed a lethal cobra clutch to dispose of Abie Coleman in 21 minutes.

Cowboy Luttrell downed Freddy Grobmier in one of the roughest matches on the card, while Stanley Pinto and Hans Kampfer toiled to a hilarious draw.

George Bruckman, the local bartender, quit tending bar long enough to whip Roy Reynolds, of Texas, in 17 minutes with a trio of flying tackles and a body press.

Great Lakes Victor

Chicago, Jan. 22 (AP).—The Great Lakes Naval Training Station basketball team added another Big Ten quintet to its list of victims tonight, humbling the University of Chicago, 50 to 27, on the Maroons' floor.

Lock Haven Arrives for C. U. Fights

Lock Haven Teachers boxing squad was due at Brookland this afternoon about 4:30 o'clock for a light workout in preparation for tomorrow night's match with the Cardinals of Catholic University.

Coach Max Bossert of the Pennsylvanians reports he has a sophomore squad but one that loves to fight and showed great promise against Bucknell last week in its opening match of the season. Lock Haven uses freshmen and usually comes up with a couple of rugged characters each winter and this team seems to be no exception.

Only three of the invaders fought against C. U. last winter and none of them won. Worth Randall, a clever junior, got a draw with Ted Mandris, who has moved upstairs into the 127-pound ranks this year. George Barnes, a good boxer, lost to Leo Gaffney, no longer with the Cards; and Capt. Mike Yelvich drew with Leon Wowak in the Brooklander's lone appearance of the season.

All three will be favorites this time although Yelvich is going up against a tough customer in Jimmy Lynagh, raven-haired C. U. rookie who has been going well in practice and may get more of an argument than he bargains for.

Two of the evening's hardest fights are expected in the 165-pound and heavyweight classes in which Elmer Huggler and Don Blommen will represent the visitors. Huggler will meet Charley Riehl, who has perked up in the last ten days and is beginning to show the form expected of him, while Blommen, a 210-pound varsity football tackle, will get a poke at Casimir (Sneeze) Kyczewski. Catholic's 240-pound knocker-outer.

Georgetown Prep Five Upsets St. John's

Little Hoyas Win, 36-28, in Catholic Prep League Game; Third Period Rally Decisive

Their second stunning upset in a row was registered by Georgetown Prep's youthful cagers yesterday, a 36-28 job with St. John's on the losing end in a Catholic Prep League batle at Garrett Park.

Victors over a powerful Bethesda-Chevy Chase club in their previous start, the Little Hoyas put on a torrid third-quarter rally to win yesterday. Trailing by 18-10 at the half, they found their stride and led by 23-19 going into the last period.

The victory gave Prep an even break in two Catholic prep games so far and the loss came in St. John's only league start.

From the first Prep gave signs that its Bethesda triumph was no fluke. Behind burly John Showell and Joe McAndrews, the hosts eked out a 6-5 edge in the first quarter. Their second-period sag was almost disastrous, but in the next period they more than made up for it.

Showell, a 200 pounder, accounted for 13 points and honors for the game. McAndrew's 10 counters was two less than the total of Chuck Dudley, Johnnie star.

Tech Defeats Devitt, Leads, 16-1, at Half

Held to a single point in the first half, Devitt Prep five wound up as a 25-16 victim of the Tech basketball forces yesterday at the winners' gym.

The losers solitary marker, coming in the first quarter, was registered by Guard Allen. Tech, meanwhile, was running up 16 points despite the fact it used reserves freely. Substitutes took over for most of the second half as the Maroon coasted in.

Bob Brewer, brother of last year's Tech guard, "Shrimp," topped scorers of both teams with 11 points.

Plasman Gets Draft Papers, Quits Football

Miami, Fla., Jan. 22 (AP).—Dick Plasman, Chicago Bears' end, said today that he has played his last football.

Plasman brought his bride here for a visit with his parents. He was attempting to enlist in one of the services, when his draft papers arrived from Chicago.

Brewers' Five Idle This Week

No game is scheduled for the Washington Brewers professional basketball team this weekend at Turner's Arena, Coach-Manager Mac Posnak announced last night.

Coach Posnak stated that Wilmington's Blue Bombers had won the first half by reason of the Brewers' loss (with four of their regulars out of action due to a train wreck) to the Philly Sphas last Sunday night.

At present John J. O'Brien, president of the American League, is arranging for the second-half schedule and will meet with officials of the league early next week for its approval. At that time a number of player deals will be discussed.

Trudy Paul's 140 Game Best At Ice Palace

A season record single game of 140 and high set of 340 by Trudy Paul, Redskins, helped her team take the first two games from the Alley-gators quintet of the Ice Palace Ladies' League. The Cardinals, besides winning all three from the Vees, posted team highs of 497 and 1461.

ARCADIA

Ruth Schooley, RFC No. 1, again topped the Ladies' Federal League at Arcadia with a 127 game and 354 set to lead her team to high game with a 553 effort as the Agriculture girls rolled top team set of 1312. Agriculture, FBI, Treasury No. 1 and FDIC scored respective sweeps over GPO, OEM No. 2, Labor and Treasury No. 2.

TEMPLE

Bill Greiner's 160 for Styles Motors and Jack O'Brien's 404 for Wolf's Market were the top scores in the Temple Minor League with both teams winning a pair over their opponents. The Loggia Roma boys proved the best pinsmen as a team when they posted highs of 643 and 1706.

'Woody' English Reinstated in Organized Ball

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 22. — Elwood "Woody" English, former shortstop with the Chicago Cubs, plans returning to the baseball wars after an absence of three years.

English was reinstated today by Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw Landis, after he had been placed on the ineligible list in 1939 for refusing to report to the St. Louis Cardinals.

English wrote Branch Rickey of the Cardinals asking for an opportunity to play or to be assigned to a coaching job. He is 35.

Weight Bugaboo Faces Novikoff

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Jan. 22.—Baseball's Lou Novikoff got on the scales and proved to one and all he hasn't been idle this winter.

The pointer journeyed up to 206 pounds.

"I'd have fainted dead if it'd gone a notch higher," confessed a witness, Coach Bill Sweeney, of the Los Angeles club.

"I'll get down to 195 in two weeks and 185 by the time spring training comes," promised the embarrassed Mr. Novikoff, whose best hitting poundage is around 182.

There was some conflict over the exact nature of the Chicago Cub outfielder's occupation this winter, but it was generally understood he's been toiling in the nearby oil fields.

It seemed probable, too, that he's been doing heavy work in the lunch rooms and chop houses.

"He must have been working overtime," commented the former Cub executive, now Los Angeles president, Clarence Rowland, neglecting to specify in which endeavor Lou had been laboring the most.

One thing is certain about the likable Russian, who was a hero last spring, a bum last summer and a hero again last fall in some places. When he said he'll get in shape, he will, or tear down a couple of oil derricks in the effort. The main difficulty, though, is that a couple of torn down oil derricks won't help Novikoff, the Cubs or the man who owns the derricks.

You'll remember that Lou was the "rookie of the year" until the year got started. Then his vaunted hitting power became almost extinct, and off he went to Milwaukee.

There Manager Charley Grimm applied something miraculous, because the Novikoff bat boomed again and he wound up leading American Association hitters with a .370 average.

Eastern Quint Drives to 37-33 Nod Over W.-L.

Eight players helped out in the White Tide's scoring, with Mike Lieb and George Pigott amassing 10 points apiece.

It was a late drive that made possible Eastern's ninth victory in 12 games. Otherwise the game was a toss up.

Eastern was the proud but shaky possessor of an 11-10 margin after the first eight minutes had expired, and after the second they had improved that to only 19-17. A series of ups and downs left matters deadlocked at 27-27 going into the final quarter, when the Tide finally stretched its advantage to 4 points.

Wings Break Ice Jinx, Beat Bruins by 4-3

By International News Service

Detroit, Jan. 22.—After being jinxed for 22 months by the league-leading Boston Bruins, the Detroit Redwings tonight had their revenge—a 4-3 hockey decision over the powerful Eastern ice aggregation.

Flashing undreamed-of power, the Motor City six swept to an early 3-0 lead in the initial 12 minutes. After Don Grosso sank two and his teammate, Syd Howe, another marker, Aubrey Clapper saved the Bruins from a scoreless session.

Hawks Defeat Americans, 4 to 2

Chicago, Jan. 22 (INS).—The Chicago Blackhawks crept to within two points of the third-place Toronto Maple Leaves in the National Hockey League standings tonight as they defeated the Brooklyn Americans, 4 to 2, before a crowd of 7341.

Hoyas' Ben Bulvin Among Gridders Signed by Rams

Cleveland, Jan. 22 (AP).—Seven college football players passed up in the National Professional League draft have been signed by the Cleveland Rams, President Dan Reeves announced today.

His acquisitions include four 220-pound tackles: Joe Pasqua and J. R. Fawcett, of Southern Methodist University; Joe Jeter, who played one year at the University of Oklahoma and two at Oklahoma City College, and Bill Shoopman, of Texas Mines.

Others signed are Forrest Covin, 195-pound end from North Texas State; Boleslaus "Ben" Bulvin, 182-pound triple-threat back from Georgetown, and Jack Boone, 180-pound tailback from Elon College in North Carolina.

Willie Wilkin Turns Wrestling Referee

Wee Willie Winkle, 6 foot 4-inch, 260-pound All National Professional Football League tackle of the Washington Redskins, who currently aspires to the role of a heavyweight boxer, undertakes another assignment at Uline's Arena Monday night.

Wee Willie will referee one of the preliminary matches on the all-star card rounded out yesterday.

Skeet Clubbers Fire For Defense Stamps

The National Capital Skeet Club is holding its national defense shoot Sunday on the club grounds near Bethesda, Md., with all entry fees going toward purchase of defense stamps to be divided among the winners of each class.

Divisions will be decided by club averages or known ability of shooters, with four events set.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 22.—Memories of the New York Boxing Writers dinner: The tears that came to some of the world's most hard-bitten eyes when Jimmy Walker concluded his tribute to Joe Louis, guest of honor, by saying quietly, "Joe, you've laid a rose on Abe Lincoln's grave." . . . Clear-eyed Lieut. Comdr. Gene Tunney's anticigarette speech, delivered without a qualm in the smoke-filled banquet hall. . . . J. Edgar Hoover saying that he preferred the fight mob to the "salons, not saloons, of society." . . . Private Louis, up since 5:30 a. m. (it was now 10 p. m.), dozing peacefully during Brig. Gen. J. J. Phelan's magnificent speech in pure double talk. . . . Little Joe Gould, looking wistfully at Louis, Dempsey, Tunney and Braddock and sighing, "I'll be glad to manage any or all of you fellows, if you want me to." . . . Sid Mercer putting the ever-warring Jacobs beachcombers at ease by announcing at the start that all lawsuits were off for the evening.

CONSIDINE

Dempsey, proud of his new position as a lieutenant in the State Guard, saying he still hoped to make it into the Regular Army as a private. . . . The yell that went up from the fight mob when Joe DiMaggio—a figure in a wholly alien field of sports endeavor—was introduced. . . . Jimmy Walker, wondering out loud if boxing can be as bad as it has been painted, "when it produces citizens like Tunney, Dempsey, Louis and Braddock. . . ."

WPA Ideal Recreation Leader

Seems to us that the President could save a lot of time and money by formally adding the Army, Navy and Marine Corps to the list of States, cities and communities whose recreation problems are now being attended to by the WPA. The WPA has 25,000 men and women who have been especially trained to teach or augment all types of recreation. Under Ott Romney, a big Utahan who springs from one of the country's leading athletic families, it has been doing some fine work with a minimum of fanfare, and would do more if it were not timid about stepping on the toes of some of the sectarian groups now attempting to aid service men.

Romney believes that the mass calisthenics type of exercise which is creeping into Army routine, for sake of something better, is contrary to every American concept. He suggests that the only satisfactory and thus worth-while recreation work is the kind to which each man has been accustomed in civilian life. It's a cinch that a man who has gone in for one of the more active sports won't get mental and physical stimulation out of doing a few dozen squats in unison with the rest of the battalion each morning.

Athletics for Million Men a Problem

These WPA people include many physical education workers, coaches, college men and women, and their range of interest is incredible. Through peacetime they have been teaching or organizing every form of recreation, including dancing.

The blossoming or Army camps was right down their alley, for by law only WPA workers and Red Cross workers are given the free run of camps. There is much these men and women can do to provide the service man with the recreation that keeps him fresh for the stern duties of war. We've got a million crowded men under arms, many of them prey to the ennui and worse that comes from huge and fundamentally recreationless concentrations. Their recreation is a serious problem—a problem which must be solved by experts, not by hastily deputized "athletic officers" or by well-meaning groups which measure their interests in this or that soldier by the religion or race into which he was born.

Travis, Zunic Oppose As Terps Meet G. W.

Scoring Duel Looms as Teams Battle At College Park Tomorrow; Ringmen Busy

Ernie Travis and Matt Zunic, beg pardon, Maryland and George Washington, will meet tomorrow night at College Park to settle two important issues: The best basketball team in town and the best individual player.

The 8 o'clock ball game was of secondary interest to the following Maryland-Western Maryland boxing match until Wednesday night when the Terps handed Georgetown a surprising defeat and left the mythical city championship hanging on tomorrow's ball game, plus its original attraction as an important Southern Conference battle.

Zunic's reputation as the outstanding courtman in this section and one of all-American caliber is being threatened by Maryland's sophomore upstart, Ernie Travis, who is rolling along at a sensational scoring pace.

Comparative records on G. W.'s senior forward from New Kensington, Pa., and Maryland's sophomore center from Silver Spring, an all-high man with Roosevelt:

	G.	FG.	F.	TP.	Ave.
Zunic	9	52	24	128	14.22
Travis	10	65	27	157	15.70

The task of Zunic and his mates will be getting through Maryland's zone defense which bothered the Hoyas Wednesday night. Terp Coach Bert Shipley used the zone until the Terps were ahead and then switched back to man for man in an attempt to catch G. U. off guard. Then, when Georgetown started its rally Maryland went back to the zone and protected its lead.

Thus Travis and Zunic will not meet in a man-to-man battle. When the Old Liners are on the offensive G. W. Coach Bill Reinhart will hardly burden Zunic down with the duties of holding Travis, but hinted last night that probably Roy McNeil, about Travis' size and who has been playing good defensive ball of late, will watch the Terp hot-shot.

Maryland could win an outright claim to the city title if they beat the Colonials tomorrow as they play only one game with G. W. and Georgetown. The game means much to both schools in the Southern Conference standings, as both are hanging around the .500 mork and must do better to gain a championship play-off berth.

G. W. can look to Bobby Gilham, who has been playing fine ball of late, and several of the sophomore replacements who are bearing out some of the preseason predictions, for help to Zunic plus the other starters, Joe Gallagher and Ed Gustafson. Travis found high-scoring company in Tommy Mont against G. U. and Bob Fetters and Bob James came through with their best games of the season for Maryland.

Maryland's boxing assignment against its upstate rivals, Western Maryland, looks to be another difficult assignment for Bobby Goldstein's mittmen who have lost to Coast Guard Academy and tied South Carolina in two previous matches.

The Terrors were particularly strong in the heavier brackets last week against Penn State when three gridders, Carlo Ortenzi, end, at 165 pounds; Harry Baker, guard, light-heavy, and Sig Jensen, tackle, at heavyweight, won with ease over the opposition. The Terrors drew in the 155-pound class and lost all the lightweight bouts and the match, 5½ to 3½. Baker and Herb Gunther, Maryland's Southern Conference champ at 175 pounds, meet in what figures to be the best bout.

Capital Store Sales Up 49% During Week

Washington department store sales in the week ended January 17 scored another striking gain, advancing 49 per cent over the volume for the same week last year. The Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, source of the figures, added that Washington store sales in the four weeks ended January 17 were 46 per cent heavier than in the same 1941 period.

Department store volume in the Fifth Federal Reserve District registered a 51 per cent increase in the week ended January 17 and was 43 per cent heavier than in the same 1941 period.

Business Briefs Of D. C. Interest

Insurance Sales Leap

Soaring 8 per cent for the year, Washington life insurance sales in 1941 aggregated $68,877,000, according to the Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau of Hartford, Conn. December business was reported at $5,984,000, a gain of 8 per cent over the same 1940 month.

The bureau reported Maryland sales of ordinary life insurance totaled $15,565,000 in December and $112,542,000 for the 12 months. The gains over the same month last year and for the full year were 58 per cent and 13 per cent, respectively.

Virginia's sales were $14,854,000 in December and $115,568,000 for 1941, gains of 66 per cent and 16 per cent, respectively.

Anniversary Donation

The National Savings & Trust Co., Fifteenth Street and New York Avenue Northwest, yesterday marked the seventy-fifth anniversary of its founding by presenting $750 to the Red Cross War Fund; $10 for each year of its existence. The contribution is in addition to $1000 given by bank employes to the Red Cross last week.

Ann Huidekoper, daughter of Col. Reginald C. Huidekoper, made the donation to George O. Vass, chairman of the financial group of the District War Fund campaign.

Would Restrict Credit Buying

The National Association of Retail Clothiers and Furnishers yesterday recommended that installment buying be discouraged to help cushion what it described as a "probable post-war depression."

The recommendation was contained in a resolution adopted by the association at the closing session of its twenty-eighth annual convention in Chicago. It said:

"The great depression was largely due to the fact that the public generally was seriously in debt for goods purchased on the installment basis. In good times like the present the average customer can usually pay cash and should be encouraged to do so in order to cushion a probable post-war depression."

$935,725 Worth of Response

The first day of the merchandising campaign of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane to stimulate investment interest in defense bonds resulted in orders being received for $935,725 worth, the Washington office reported last night. Subscriptions were recorded from the firm's branches in 93 cities including Washington.

The Outlook

By Merryle S. Rukeyser
Post Special Writer

Study of British Policy Might Avoid Idleness Of Many Workers in Transition Period

In the vast shift under way of American productive power for the purpose of achieving victory, it is desirable to avoid an "economic no man's land," whereby workers needlessly become idle through undue disruption of the national economy.

It is costly to take self-supporting men off the payrolls of civilian industries in a careless manner unless they can be absorbed in the armed services or in the munitions industries.

Over in Great Britain, an attempt has been made to deal with this very situation systematically, instead of haphazardly. The requirements of the war efforts necessarily interfere with business as usual through diversion of manpower, tools and materials. Yet at the same time the British have sought to keep in mind that their economic strength depends on keeping as many manhours as feasible productively employed.

Since the governmental war effort caused the maladjustments the British government has been alert to the desirability of cooperating with industrial management and with labor in managing the transition from peacetime industry to total mobilization.

The task of adjustment has been directed by the board of trade and the ministry of labor and national service. While the primary objective has been to transfer the fullest possible amount of the nation's industrial manpower to the purposes of war production, the government has been solicitious toward home industries which have been adversely affected by the change.

The British have been zealous in seeking to avoid the economic waste of "priority unemployment."

Of course, the British have been handicapped by no fantastic and obsolete theories of antitrust law enforcement, but, on the contrary, have deliberately caused competitors to unite in order to concentrate production and distribution for reasons of efficiency. This trend runs directly counter to the philosophy of the American Sherman Act, especially as interpreted by our own Thurman Arnold.

The British attitude has been summed up in a "War-Time Trading Bulletin," which points out: "From the point of view of the national interest, it is most undesirable that cuts in civil consumption should be met by large-scale part-time working. A spread-over of this kind results in an uneconomical use of certain types of labor. It does not free the factory and storage space which will, in many cases, be needed for fovernment use. The effect of a diminished turnover on costs may, in some cases, have serious repercussions on prices which the government cannot ignore. Finally, it would be worse than useless for firms to allow their working capital to be eaten up in the vain hope that the position might become easier.

"The policy of the government is therefore, to concentrate production in a reduced number of factories working full time. These factories should be able to produce the output required for government orders, the greatest practicable export trade and the minimum needs of our population, while at the same time preserving the good will of the factories closed down."

The trades initially involved in these discussions overseas included hosiery, pottery, cotton textiles, boot and shoe, leather, toys, corsets, umbrellas and other consumer industries.

Federal Construction Awards Gain in Week

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—Engineering News-Record reported today total engineering construction awards for the week of $127,640,000 were above those for last week but trailed the week in 1941.

Federal awards, making up 86 per cent of this week's volume, were 93 per cent higher than last week and topped the 1941 week by 7 per cent.

The current week's volume brought 1942 construction to $407,086,000, a decrease of 16 per cent from the four weeks total last year.

Lively Buying Boosts Cotton To 12-Year Top

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 22.—Cotton futures soared to the highest prices in 12 years today in an extremely active session which saw the market close at near the day's best gains of $1.75 to $1.85 a bale.

Huge Government cloth contracts were held by most traders to have provided the impetus for the rise although some bought on the hope that a favorable compromise on price control legislation might be imminent.

The highest price today was 19.17 in the October delivery. The previous high was established in September, 1929, at 20.18 for the May delivery.

Grade "A" print cloth ceiling price was automatically raised ½ cent a pound yesterday to 46½ cents on the advance in the average price of spot cotton at ten designated markets to 19.06 cents.

The spot price advanced 37 points to 19.43 today and only a few more points automatically will increase the ceiling price to 47 cents a pound.

Port receipts Wednesday, 8881 bales; port stocks, 3,386,203. Range follows:

Columbia Federal Assets Reported At Record Level

Assets of the Columbia Federal Savings & Loan Association are at a new high of $7,006,668, Clarence E. Kefauver, executive vice president and secretary, reported to shareholders at the annual meeting. This is an increase of $848,769 over the previous year, he added.

New savings and investment accounts numbering more than 800 were opened during 1941 and the net gain in savings and investment capital was reported as $1,184,621. Dividends during the past year amounted to $186,033, largest distribution in the association's history. Reserves and undivided profits were increased by $69,428.

Mr. Kefauver reported that the association so far has sold more than $125,000 in defense bonds and that sales are increasing daily.

All officers were reelected as follows: C. Gay Harrell, president; Clarence E. Kefauver, executive vice president and secretary; William E. Poulton, treasurer; Howard E. Thompson, assistant secretary.

Directors in addition to the above officers are W. Owen Hohenstein, Albert O. Denham, George C. Wentzel and George B. Cowles. James C. Wilkes was elected general counsel.

Iron Ore Consumption Sets New Lakes' Record

Cleveland, Jan. 22 (AP).—The scrap iron shortage boosted December consumption of upper lakes iron ore to a record 7,061,981 gross tons, the Lake Superior Iron Ore Association reported today.

This was an increase of 449,795 tons over last October's previous monthly peak of 6,612,186 gross tons, and brought last year's consumption to a record 76,335,682 tons. The previous yearly high was 63,646,000 tons in 1929.

Due to scarcity of scrap, a larger than customary percentage of ore is being used by the steel industry in making pig iron, the report indicated.

Slight Upturn In Rails Marks Light Trading

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 22.—Rails were the principal upward movers in today's stock market and even they failed to exhibit a great deal of bullishness over the passenger fare increase granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The carriers were out in front at the start with gain, running to a point or more. Other groups also steadied. Buying soon dried up and top marks were reduced in most cases. At the close a fair assortment of declines made for moderate irregularity.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged at 37.3. Dealings dwindled after the brief early swing and transfers for the full proceedings fell to 429,670 shares, second smallest turnover for five hours since October 3. It compared with 583,850 Wednesday.

Rate Boost Discounted

The thought that the fare boost indicated the I. C. C. also would allow a 10 per cent lift in freight rates was helpful, as was a more than seasonal upturn in last week's freight loadings. Conservative contingents, however, inclined to await the final decision on higher freight tariffs inasmuch as some predictions were heard that a lower increase might be ordered.

Scant speculative inspiration was derived from the Far Pacific war news and mild worries still were present anent the enemy submarine menace off the Atlantic Coast. Tax fears remained as another bullish handicap.

Stocks retaining modest improvement included Santa Fe, Union Pacific, Chesapeake & Ohio, Great Northern, N. Y. Central, Pennsylvania, Southern Pacific, Southern Railway, U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, American Smelting, Greyhound Corporation, Yellow Truck, Douglas Aircraft, Lockheed, Dow Chemical and Union Carbide.

Motor Shares Off

In arrears were General Motors, Chrysler, Anaconda, Allied Chemical, Johns-Manville, Eastman Kodak, International Harvester, Deere, Caterpillar Tractor, Sperry, U. S. Rubber and Goodyear.

Motors again had to contend with the prospects that new passenger car building for private consumers would be out for the duration. Scrap shortage continued to confront the steels which were unable to get ahead to any noticeable extent.

Carrier bonds and South American dollar loans pushed forward. Commodities were mostly higher with cotton futures climbing $1.75 to $1.85 a bale to new 12-year tops.

Axton-Fisher "A" was up 2 in the curb in the wake of a recapitalization proposal. Others in the plus ranks were Illinois Zinc, Phoenix Securities, Republic Aviation and Wright Hargreaves, American Cyanamid "B" slipped, along with American Gas and Gulf Oil. Volume here approximated 78,000 shares versus 116,000 the day before.

N. Y. Restaurant Chain Starts Rationing Sugar

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—The Schrafft chain of 38 restaurants today started rationing sugar to its patrons, serving two lumps with each order of tea or coffee.

A printed announcement attached to menus said "we hope this will be only a temporary allotment and that conditions will soon allow the removal of this limitation."

Other large restaurant chains continued to serve sugar as before.

Bank Idle Cash Up 20 Million In Past Week

By the Associated Press

Lendable excess reserves of banks increased in $20,000,000 to a total of $3,580,000,000 in the week ended January 21.

The Federal Reserve Board reported:

"During the week ended January 21 member bank reserve balances increased $153,000,000. Additions to member bank reserves arose from 135 million dollars in Treasury deposits with Federal Reserve banks, 20 million dollars in Treasury cash and 8 million dollars in nonmember deposits and other Federal Reserve accounts and from increases of 10 million dollars in gold stock and 3 million dollars in Treasury currency, offset in part by an increase of 15 million dollars in money in circulation and a decrease of 7 million dollars in reserve bank credit. Excess reserves of member banks on January 21 were estimated to be approximately $3,580,000,000, an increase of 20 million dollars for the week.

"The principal changes in holdings of bills and securities were an increase of 85 million dollars in United States Government bonds and decreases of 85 million dollars in Treasury notes and 4 million dollars in Treasury bills.'

Changes in member bank reserve balances and related items during the week and the year ended January 21, 1942, were reported as follows:

N. A. M. Assails Proposed Proxy Rule Revisions

The National Association of Manufacturers attacked proxy proposals of the securities industry yesterday as "the most serious threat to business and the most shocking attempt at class legislation on behalf of a special interest."

The views were expressed by Frayser Jones, New York, chairman of the association's subcommittee on industrial financing, as the House Interstate Commerce Committee resumed hearings on approximately 80 changes in the 1934 Securities and Exchange Act proposed by the securities industry.

The industry has recommended changes in proxy rules to require that issuers submit to security holders prior to meetings the information required by the proxy rules and that the proxy section be made applicable not only to securities registered on national exchanges but also to those having an interstate over-the-counter market or securities of corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

Another proposal assailed by Jones would extend to companies engaged in interstate commerce or whose securities are handled in an interstate over-the-counter market the requirements that officers, directors, and 10 per cent stockholders report their transactions in equity securities of their companies.

Jones charged the proposal was "devised and presented," without "any submission to American businessmen," and "in fact we have known of a number of industrial executives who were astonished to learn that any such proposal had been formally submitted to Congress."

Jones said he could see "no possible justification for casting unjustified burdens on American medium-sized business enterprises just because another segment of the business community had felt the weight of Securities and Exchange Commission regulations."

"In essence," he added, "American businessmen can only oppose with the utmost vigor proposals for the selfish benefit of the New York City's Stock Exchanges where these would be at the expenses of industry."

The Securities and Exchange Commission has approved the proposal that information required by proxy rules be submitted to holders prior to meetings, but has not indorsed the suggestion to extend application of the proxy rules or reporting requirements to securities having an interstate over-the-counter market.

George P. Rea, president of the New York Curb Exchange, said, the amendments would be conducive to "bona fide competition . . . for the good of the public." He described charges that the exchanges are trying to create a monopoly for themselves as "very much of a red herring."

The principal fear of over-the-counter dealers, Rea asserted, is that if their securities are dealt in on an exchange "the publication . . . of the price at which a security was bought or sold on the exchange market may upset a member of the public who has bought from or sold to a dealer during the day at some other price. Information as to prices on exchanges may be very embarrassing to the dealers who have themselves traded."

WPB Eyes 'Frozen' Metal in Printshops

The War Production Board, it was learned yesterday, is considering proposals for recovering unestimated quantities of copper, lead, tin, brass, aluminum and zinc now "frozen" in the form of obsolete engravings, printing plates and dies in print shops throughout the country.

Details of the plans, which resulted from a meeting of the WPB printing and publishing branch with its industry advisory committee, were not made public.

Officials said the meeting also discussed methods of conserving supplies and curtailing the use of colored inks, widely used in comic strips and special newspaper advertisements as well as in job printing. They added that supplies of black ink were expected to be sufficient to meet all requirements.

Many of the materials used in production of colored inks have become important in war industries.

On another front the WPB ordered national survey to determine whether copper and copper scrap were flowing fully into military production and whether fabricators were complying with priority orders.

The board's division of industry operations announced an immediate plant-by-plant inspection of more than 90 primary fabricators of copper. Investigators will study receipts, deliveries and inventories of virgin copper and copper scrap.

In another step yesterday the board decreed that producers of medium and heavy trucks, truck trailers, passenger carriers and school bus bodies may make, during the first quarter of this year, 60 per cent of the number of designated replacement parts sold by them for replacement purposes during the last half of 1941.

Private Lives — By Edwin Cox

A FIG FOR FATE!

THERE ARE FEW TWISTS OF FORTUNE THAT WINSTON CHURCHILL CANNOT TURN TO ADVANTAGE. AFTER THE ACCIDENT THAT INTERRUPTED HIS LAST VISIT TO AMERICA HE PAID ALL HIS EXPENSES WITH AN ARTICLE ENTITLED: "HOW IT FEELS TO BE HIT BY A MOTOR CAR."

SAFETY FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS

MUST BE NERVE-RACKING TO ATTEND MASS IN HONDURAS WHEN PRESIDENT CARIAS IS PRESENT. HE HAS MACHINE GUNS MOUNTED INSIDE THE CHURCH!

It's RANSOM SHERMAN
Mine Host at Crestfallen Manor

Ransom Sherman makes his slap-happy debut over WJSV and the Columbia network

Listen! with Glynn

It may seem more than slightly incongruous in Washington to talk about the woes of hotel keepers—it being impossible to imagine Washington hotel keepers having any woes these days, the bland way they are able to turn away paying customers.

But maybe that will make all the funnier to Washington audiences the new comedy show which makes its debut over WJSV and the Columbia network at 10 o'clock tonight.

For it's about the trials and tribulations of a somewhat insane hotel keeper, name of Ransom Sherman, who runs a hostelry appropriately called Crestfallen Manor. As the happy-go-lucky guiding hand of Crestfallen Manor, our host leads a feverish sort of life, with demands of the guests for entertainment ranging from requests for music appreciation lessons to lectures on the international situation. Mr. Sherman's eager but misplaced enthusiasms invariably end in a complete loss of his boasted dignity as the perfect host. But at each crucial moment, of which there are many, he is mercifully saved by the vocal contributions of Martha Tilton, the "sweetheart of swing," and by Gordon Jenkin's Orchestra.

Sherman himself is a musician of uncertain note. He played saxophone in the band at the University of Michigan until that activity led to two suspensions. He then bought a flute because it was so easily concealed, and he sneaks it out occasionally and tootles it on the broadcasts.

Contract Bridge

When South played today's deal at a three-no-trump contract, he also had to rely on a trick maneuver, making his game by an unusual holdup play. West opened the heart jack and declarer allowed it to win the trick. By this move declarer gave up all hope of taking two heart tricks, but at the same time he made his contract safe if East originally held two hearts and the king of clubs.

West continued the heart ten after winning the jack, and South won with one of his honors. He led the club queen toward the board and finessed it, East winning the king. Now East was powerless to return his partner's suit. He shifted to a diamond, but South went up with the ace, refusing to risk the finesse. Declarer then cashed his high cards and made his contract, taking two spades, one heart, one diamond and five clubs.

Note that declarer would have been set two tricks if he had won the first trick with one of his heart honors. Upon getting in with the club king East would have led a heart through declarers last stopper, giving the defenders five hearts and a club.

Note that by the hold-up, playing a small heart on the opening lead when he could have won the trick, declarer was attempting to prevent the defenders from establishing the suit until it was too late to cash their long-suit tricks.

New Police Board to Try Petty Cases

Operation of summary trial boards by police precinct commanders, replacing the regular trial board in cases of minor infractions of discipline, will begin February 1.

Authority for the establishment of the new trial bodies was given the District Commissioners last month when an act of Congress of February, 1901, was amended.

Under the new statute, commanding officers are empowered "to administer oaths and take affirmations before such boards and are empowered to impose penalties for minor infractions which may not exceed $25."

A Commissioners' order provides that requests for trial by the summary board must be made in writing and that in cases where fines are imposed, the defendant "may elect to have five hours of extra duty substituted for every $5 of fine."

All cases tried before precinct commanders are subject to review by district inspectors, it was said, and they shall indicate their approval or disapproval of the findings in a report to the chief of police.

The police superintendent was constituted as "final reviewing authority" in all cases, with his decision being final unless an appeal is noted within five days. In the event of an appeal, the case will be referred to the regular Trial Board for adjudication.

Purpose of the new trial setup, it was stated, was to relieve the regular Trial Board of much petty work and to leave that body free for the trial of major offenses.

5000 in Md. Face Liability Of $687,000

Almost 5000 Marylanders, many of whom now live in Washington or its suburbs because of defense work, face total liabilities of $687,000 caused by a Pennsylvania insurance group's insolvency in 1933, under a Maryland Court of Appeals decision handed down yesterday.

The firm involved is the Keystone Indemnity Exchange. It was reported that under the appellate court decision, action will now be taken in Maryland courts to collect the liability in assessments from its policyholders.

There are upward of 26,000 policyholders and aggregate claims of $2,800,000 involved throughout the country, according to Ralph P. Dunn, Washington attorney, who represents the Pennsylvania insurance commissioner, Matthew H. Taggart, in the action.

Yesterday's decision resulted from a test case in which a Baltimore Superior Court judge originally held that the policyholders were not liable under a recently enacted State law. The law provides that no policyholder in a reciprocal inter-insurance exchange group—such as Keystone—can be held liable for assessment unless notified within a year after expiration of his policy.

The Court of Appeals reversed this ruling, however, asserting that the law was not retroactive to cover the prior Keystone insolvency.

In addition to the Maryland suits, there are about 770 cases pending in Municipal Court here against Washingtonians, amounting to about $100,000 in claimed assessments. These are not affected by the Maryland court's decision.

However, the Court of Appeals here has refused to review a decision of Municipal Court Judge Ellen K. Ready which held that the assessment levy against Capital residents was valid.

Screen Door Hit Her, Woman Says, Suing for $15,000

Mrs. Diana Vander Zwart, of 2032 Thirty-seventh Street Southeast, filed suit in District Court yesterday for $15,000 damages for injuries which she says were received when the wind blew a screen door open and whacked her on the head, shoulders and a hand as she was walking on Alabama Avenue Southeast last October.

The screen door is owned, it is alleged, by the Howard Cleaners and Launderers, and was "attached to premises known as 3855 Alabama Avenue Southeast." According to the plaintiff, the establishment was negligent in failing "to maintain and fasten said screen door in a reasonable and proper manner" to keep it from swinging at people when not in use.

Moreover, her husband, Richard P. Vander Zwart, is asking another $1500 from the laundry to recompense him for medical and hospital expenses and for the loss of his wife's services. Mrs. Vander Zwart asserts that some of her injuries are permanent.

Drive Gets 23,000 Books for Buddies

Books and music, particularly sheet music, are wanted, Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, chairman of the campaign here, said. They may be taken to one of the following collection centers:

Public Library, any branch; George Washington, Catholic and American Universities; District Grocery Stores and Safeway Stores, and Brentano's book-stores.
